The Committee on Resolutions offered their report, endorsing the resolutions of the National Convention lately held at Chicago, the State Convention; and the Convention of the 6th Congressional District. The report pledged the Convention to the support of Blaine and Logan, and also to the support of Mr. Markham for Congress. That only such taxes should be levied as are necessary for the support of the Government, and that such taxes should bear equally upon all kinds of property. That candidates for the Legislature should be pledged to support such measures as would secure these results. That the Republican party is opposed to monopolies of all kinds, and to the granting of any exclusive privileges. That the Republican party regards intelligence as the strength of the nation, and, as it ever has been, will continue to be the stanch support of our public schools. That the Republicans of Inyo county extend to the Republicans of Mexico congratulations, and the hope that they will go on in the spirit of Republicanism to attain the national greatness their valor and virtue so well qualify them to reach. The report was adopted. The order of business adopted made nominations of candidates for the several county officers next in order.

For Superior Judge, S. D. Woods was nominated, and being the only candidate, was made the nominee by acclamation.

For Sheriff, J. H. Stoutenborough, G. L. Drake, and Joseph Rowan, all of Bishop Creek, were placed in nomination. Voting was by ballot, and when the result was announced the vote was found to stand: Drake, 3; Stoutenborough, 17; Rowan, 23. Rowan was declared the nominee.

For Clerk the following were nominated: C. H. Groves, J. H. Shannon, J. H. Morrison. The name of J. J. Stewart was presented, but Mr. Stewart promptly declined to be a candidate. A ballot was had, with the following result: Groves, 19 votes; Morrison, 1; Shannon, 23; and the Chairman declared Mr. Shannon nominated.

For Treasurer, two gentlemen were placed in nomination; Wm. Walker, and the present incumbent of the office, George H. Hardy. On the ballots being counted it was found that Mr. Walker had got thirteen votes, and Mr. Hardy thirty; the latter was declared the nominee.

For Surveyor, Joseph Seeley, the present incumbent, was nominated by acclamation.

John H. Stoutenborough was nominated unanimously for Assemblyman.

For Committee on Conference with delegates from Mono and Alpine counties to name a candidate for the Assembly, the following were elected: S. G. Sneden, Thomas E. Jones, J. H. Bulpitt.

The new County Central Committee are the following: Thomas E. Jones, Round Valley; James H. Brown, Lincoln; G. Thede, Bishop Station; P. A. Chalfant, Cottonwood; J. H. Stoutenborough, S. G. Sneden, Bishop Creek; George Collins, Polita; Duncan Campbell, Big Pine; N. H. Tibbetts, Fish Springs; Thomas Parker, J. A. Shoemaker, A. R. Conklin, J. D. Blair, G. H. H. Walker, Olancha; Thomas Bastian, Darwin; R. J. Whittaker, Lookout; J. R. Graham, Revenue; Frank Wheeler, Sherman.

For Supervisors the following were nominated: First District, J. D. Harger; Second, George Stevens; Third, J. D. Blair; Fourth, Thomas Boland; Fifth, Frank Wheeler.

A GLORIOUS ANNIVERSARY.

Celebration of Mexican Independence at Lone Pine.

The citizens of Inyo of Mexican descent celebrated the anniversary of Mexican independence at Lone Pine this week. A program providing various exercises and amusements for three days was prepared, and all of it was carried out. Tuesday being the 74th anniversary, the exercises for that day were more interesting than on either of the others. A platform was erected on Main street, and was decorated with pictures of Mexican heroes, a fine engraving of Washington, various flags, banners and evergreens. From early morning people had been gathering from all directions; many by rail from distant points, while others went by wagons from places up and down the valley. From Independence in particular there was quite a large attendance. The hotels were filled to overflowing, and many visitors were depended upon the kindness of citizens for accommodations.

At two o'clock P. M. a procession approached the platform, headed by a band of music. When the company were seated, the President of the Day, Mr. Frank Miranda, made a brief address in the Spanish language. The band played a Mexican national air, and Mr. Miranda read the Mexican Declaration of Independence.

At the conclusion of the reading the President introduced the Orator of the Day, Mr. Rosario Lozano. The address was in Spanish.

The manner of the speaker was admirable, earnest, graceful and dignified; no violent or awkward gesticulation, no straining after effect, no affectation; speaking evidently from a full heart and a full mind—for it was clear he knew what he was talking about—he held the closest attention of his audience, was frequently applauded, and when he closed was greeted with long, loud and hearty "Vivas."

The Mexican national anthem was then sung by the Senoritas, R. Porcha, J. Castro, Dolores de Esparza, and Paulita Esno. This anthem was sung exquisitely; the voices of the singers blended so thoroughly, and their training in the piece was so near perfection that all hearers were delighted, whether the language of the anthem was understood or not. A patriotic poem was well recited by M. Carrasco, and then followed an eloquent speech in English by S. D. Woods, who was heard with close attention and rewared with enthusiastic applause at the conclusion. Hon. J. M. Keeler followed with a speech in English, running over the principal events in Mexican history, and predicting for our sister Republic a glorious future. Mr. Keeler was also rewarded with hearty applause. At the conclusion of this part of the exercises the crowd adjourned to witness a display of horsemanship by a company of about a dozen cavaliers tilting at rings suspended from beams overhead. There were three, rings, each about two inches in diameter and fifty yards apart. The riders approached in turn at full gallop and attempting to take the rings off on a sharpened pole representing a lance. Many trials were made, one, and sometimes two rings being taken off; but at last all three of them were carried away on the lance of Mr. Carrasco.

A large rooster was then buried in the sand, with a bag of dollars tied to his feet, and nothing of the creature visible but his head. The riders came on at full gallop, and in passing the bird, each rider bent over, holding himself from being dashed to the ground by his spur stuck in the saddle on the opposite side, and attempted to snatch the bird out by the head. Every time he was grabbed at the fowl ducked his head, and to catch such an object from a horse tearing wildly along was no easy task. One rider failed to get a good hold with his spur, and was sent flying, like a stone from a sling. No attention was paid to the man; all the other horsemen started off to catch the flying, riderless steed, which was soon captured. His luckless rider in the meantime had got upon his feet, dug the sand out of his eyes, and when his horse was brought back, mounted him and resumed the sport, apparently none the worse for a collision with the earth that might have shaken to pieces anything less cohesive than a ball of twine. Feathers were again and again snatched from the head and neck of the bird, but no one succeeded in getting a firm enough grasp upon him to drag him and his pendent purse from the sand, till darkness set in, and the attempt was given up.

A little later there was a brilliant display of fireworks, lasting about an hour. A ball followed, at which there was only one thing to regret—that the hall was not twice as large. Messrs. Richards and Castro had cleared everything out of their large hall, save a platform at one end for the musicians, over whom Professor Wood presided. The hall was profusely decorated with flags of Mexico and the United States, flowers, pictures and bright streamers. Many ladies present wore the national colors over beautiful dresses of silks and satins; and in fact the ball room presented a very gay, and even brilliant scene. Near midnight the company adjourned for supper to the Lone Pine Hotel, where the dining room was found to be as gaily decorated as the ball room. The great variety of fruits and flowers available at this season, enabled Mr. Reynolds to make such a display as would be difficult to equal beyond Southern California, and of these fine materials he had made good use. Supper over, dancing was resumed and kept up till morning, and even then the company broke up reluctantly. After some hours of rest, visitors from the more distant places made short excursions in the vicinity of town, calling upon friends, and enjoying pleasant rambles through orchards and vineyards abounding in beautiful flowers, and such fruits as it is hard to believe can be excelled anywhere else on earth. Such scenes as these around Lone Pine fully realize all that eastern people imagine of California. Said one lady who had lived in another part of the State some years: "Now I realize that I am in California; formerly I always felt as if I had been cheated out of my expectations."

Part of the day was occupied with footraces and other games, and in the evening the hall was again filled with an audience to a concert given by Professor Wood, assisted by a number of friends. This affair also passed off very pleasantly.

To dwellers in the larger cities, where every moment is occupied by some in such eager pursuit of wealth as drives men mad, and where many others are almost maddened in their efforts to obtain the bare necessaries of life, it may appear an extravagant waste of time to give three whole days at this busy season to such sports and pleasures as were had at Lone Pine on this occasion. But it was just such occasions as this that have given to the world the most treasured remains of ancient poetry and art, that have led in all ages and countries created that strong love of country that made men patriots and heroes, and inspired them to do and say the deeds and words that redeemed nations from slavery to freedom, and are at once the cause and the effect of events that illuminate the pages of history, and are themes for the eloquent and examples for the brave of all nations.

RICHARD ROCK'S VISITOR

Since his wife died, Richard Rock had lived alone and friendless. She, poor soul, had keep some good feelings about the home, and now and then a spare plate stood on the table, or an extra chair by the fireside. Mean as he was, he had never quite brought himself to say to her, "You shall not have a guest," though he prosed away by the hour about the "terrible expense" after each stranger departed. Neither could he quite prevent a deed of charity now and then, the gift of a loaf, or an old gown, or a bag of flour. The unhappy woman's kind heart would have its way at times, for Richard Rock's parsimony was not induced by poverty, but by a miserly soul. He had only been an economical young man when she first knew him, but the greed of gold grew with every year, though they had no children to whom to leave it, and were possessed of enough and to spare for any ordinary lifetime.

Mrs. Rock died suddenly. A little better living, a few luxuries, the use of a carriage in wet weather, above all a little more love and tenderness, might have saved her life. Perhaps old Rock did not guess it. When she was gone he felt her loss as he had never dreamed he would. Her placid face and mild smile haunted him. The neatness which she had keep within the dilapidated home, the skill with which she prepared the coarse viands, the quiet way in which she had ministered to all his wants, had scarcely been understood before she was taken from him. More wretched than he had been in all his life before, he shut himself up alone in the great barren-farm house, and lived there like a beggar. No guest ever entered his door. No one ever paused there for charity. With its closed shutters, and naked door yard, where once the wife's simple flowers and herbs grew, it was as desolate a place as any one could dream of.

It was winter now, and the snow lay piled all about; was heaped upon the fences, in the window ledges and upon the chimney-pots. Long icicles hung from broken waterspouts and the edge of the great rain-tub; and within a little wretched fire of sticks and branches burned in one small fire place, over which rich Richard Rock shivered and shuddered, as though he had been the poorest creature in town.

It was 9 o'clock, and a Saturday night. Few, lights burned in the village, but the lecture-room of the church was all aglow. There they held a fair, the proceeds of which were to be bestowed in alms upon the poor of the town, who had suffered much during the hard winter. Some rich men had given considerable sums in aid of the object and one enterprising individual bolder than the rest, had appealed to Richard Rock with no success whatever. He had, indeed, hinted that he himself stood in need of aid property was bringing him so little and the charitable beggar fled affrighted. They talked him over at some of the tables that night and said how, if Mrs Rock had been alive, at least one five dollar bill would have been found somehow for so charitable a purpose. When people are talking ill of one they say the ears burn. Richard Rock's must have been hot enough that night were this the case; but instead they were cold—cold as ice—cold as the rest of his person, from head to foot; not with quite a natural coldness, either. He was not used to such fire, and he had an old blanket about his shoulders over his ragged greatcoat. It was a chill that seemed to come from the heart and made him shiver dreadfully. The first shiver struck him when the clock struck nine It was such a deadly, curdling chill that it struck Richard Rock wofully; and before it had passed away a knock sent him shivering again. It was not a loud, fierce knock—just a timid, tremulous rap or two; but none the less did his heart go into his mouth at the sound.

Who could it be at that time of night? Richard Rock crept to the door, and unbarred it as he asked the question. A figure, all draped in gray, a shawl or a mantle over the head, dropping down to the feet, stood without It turned its face toward Rickard Rock, clasped its hands and said, in a voice that set him shivering again:

'I'm cold to-night, very cold, and I have no shelter. Let me in and give me a crust to eat, and let me lie anywhere, and God will bless you.'

Richard Rock shrunk away. "I never encourage beggars," he said and shut the door and fastened it; but before he had reached the fireplace the knocking came again.

Again he opened the door and repulsed the begger with harsh word; bet the being—man, woman or child, whichever it was—never stirred from the spot. It stood just where he had first seen it, and called him to the door eleven times. On the eleventh he yielded and said: "Come in, then." The figure advanced and approached the fireplace. There were two chairs always standing beside it. One was Mrs. Rock's. Into that it dropped.

The gray drapery hid its face, but a pair of strange, bright eyes gleamed through the shadow upon Richard Rock's face. They frightened him again. In fear, rather than in pity, he went to the table and brought to it a piece of bread and a cup of milk. The singular being took them, and ate and drank. Then it looked at the old man steadily. To break the spell which seemed to be falling upon him Richard Rock spoke.

'You're a strager here, I reckon.'

'I come from far away,' said the figure, not showing him more of the face than he had yet seen.

'You choose a bad time to travel' said Richard.

'I had work to do,' said the stranger

'For whom?' asked Richard.

'For the poor,' said the stranger.

'You look poor enough yourself,' said the old man.

'But there are poorer than I,' said the stranger. 'Out in the village there many will die if they have neither fire nor food. I want a gift for them, Richard Rock.'

'You!' cried Richard. Good heavens! This is a trick, then, of that confounded Deacon with the subscription paper. I'm—'

The strange figure lifted its hand.

'A year ago there was a woman here,' it said.

Richard started.

'She sat in this chair knitting,' said the voice under the gray hood. 'I think you loved her a little; was it so?'

"Surely I did," said Richard Rock.

"You married her when she was a blithe young girl," said the figure, "and you made her an old woman before her time. She toiled wearily from morning until night: She lived on coarse and common food."

"So did I," said Richard.

"She knew it," said the being. "She hardly blamed you. She loved you. You miss her now, sometimes?"

"God knows I do,' said Richard.

"Yet you thought wine too dear to buy, and let her die for want of it," said the stranger.

"No, No!" cried Richard. Who told you that? If I thought that I—"

"It is true," said the stranger. "Yet she died loving you. If she could come from heaven now, and ask a boon of you would you grant it?"

"God knows I would," said Richard, "but the dead never return." And then—as he afterward averred—the figure rose slowly, and all the gray drapery dropped away, and he saw, robed in white, more beautiful than when he wooed her in her girlhood, and with a shining halo round her head, his wife herself, and no other. He could not speak.

She looked upon him with a gentle smile.

"They said you would not entertain me, but I made you," she said softly. "I knew you better than they. Promise me, before I leave you, that you will do just what I say."

Richard could only gasp:

"I will."

"A year from this night you will die," said the spirit. "You can take nothing with you whither you must go. There are poor creatures dying of want hard by; succor them."

"I will," said Richard.

"Give your gold to those who will use it for the poor," said the spirit, "and blot out the long selfish years by one of utter generosity. At its end I will meet you. Richard, good-by."

The clock struck 12 as she spoke; he saw her fade, as the rainbow fades from the skies. He strove to clutch her robe, but it eluded his grasp, and he fell fainting to the floor.

From that hour Richard Rock was a changed man. His gifts to the poor were countless, and the will made full of wise and charitable bequests The houseless learned that under one roof they might find food and rest.

He died, as the spirit had foretold, a year from the night of its visitation; and on his deathbed revealed the story to the venerable clergyman, on whose authority it is given.

IN THE HIGH SIERRAS.

From Independence to King's River.—Magnificent Scenery, Fishing, Hunting—Experience and Incidents of Trail and Camp.

Years ago, while standing before Bierstadt's great picture, "The Headwaters of King's River," we determined that some day we would stand in the presence of the original, for we knew that the brush, though guided by genius and enriching the canvass with splendor of form and color, does at best but faintly suggest the might and beauty of the creations it transfers. This determination, though baffled for years, was realized during the last month, and we have seen what we knew we must see—a grandeur above copy and a magnificence beyond the painter's art.

That some estimate may be made of the position of King's River from Independence and the route by which it is reached in direction, as well as the effort required in the accomplishment of the trip, we will briefly state that the trail from the head of the Kearsarge Cañon, which fronts Independence on the west and plainly visible from the town, is almost a straight line westward. The distance from Independence is not more than forty miles, and can be accomplished by a horseman unencumbered, in a single day, riding from sun to sun. There must be no loitering on the way, though you may be tempted from step to step by the accumulation of wonders which crown the horizons and fill up the foreground of your trail. No loitering, but a persistent pressing forward; for many a steep is to be scaled, and rocky ridges and slopes to be traversed, which will test the endurance of horse and the patience of rider. This trail, though but seldom traveled, and presenting in some few places steep and difficult ascents, yet compares favorably with other trails in the Sierras which lead into the hearts of places so grandly built.

If the Kingdom of Heaven itself as proclaimed by the Scriptures is reached by a narrow and difficult way, we cannot hope that the kingdoms of this earth—such as these—are to be reached without trial and effort. This effort, however, adds spirit to the accomplishment for from it comes a sense of strength, of courage and endurance that lifts the senses into a mood as grand as the lofty and beautiful creations into whose presence we penetrate.

The advance into the heart of the Sierras from mile to mile discloses beauty accumulating on beauty, and grandeur rising on grandeur—a constant, yet ever changing scene, wherein is mixed such groups of mountains and splendid creations that tire and weariness are forgotten and the day's march becomes full of sweetness as are the pauses of a delicious dream.

The morning of August 26th was an active one in Independence. The streets full of preparation for this trip; mules loaded with bedding and provisions for ease, sustenance and luxury; galoping horses, bearing ladies young and old; men and boys, mounted, eager, expectant and merry—gave a dash and color of life to the town, as vigorous as it was unusual.

The party, consisting of Judge A. R. Conklin, wife and two daughters, Misses Maggie and Emily, Miss Minnie Thomson, and myself, with Matt. McDonald, Chas. Hoole, Harry Cook and Edward Rose as guides, made the start at 9 A. M. destined for Onion Valley where was to be struck the first camp. This valley lies at the head of Kearsarge Cañon, twelve miles distant from Independence. Clasped by majestic piles of rock, made musical with the dash of falls and streams, carpeted with green grasses and enriched with the bloom of flowers, it is a delicious spot—a poem wrought in rock. Here after the excitement of a climb exhilarating by reason of its novelty as the afternoon of a glorious day made the mountains mightier by shadows and the airs balmy and delicious, a camp was made.

Here each, to his hearts desire, followed his or her will—one to lie in bed of grasses for contemplation, for visions and repose, another, with rod and line to lure the shimmy trout from out his brook; while shouts and laughter and snatches of song made the high airs musical with delight.

That afternoon has become to more than one a memory; and carved [illegible] along its walls is this: "Remember the 26th of August in Onion valley."

And then came the night, serene and sweet—the lofty heavens—the lower valley, its depths but faintly suggested beneath the light of the moon—the towering peaks, silent sentinels of silence—the sound of falling waters swing to the breeze—the campfire flaring in bright flames, then dying to mere glimmers—made a picture and an experience that cannot be expressed. Suffice to say that in such moments and amid such scenes, the lines of care fade from the brow and the wrinkles of the heart itself become smoothed out. Experience ripens into hope, and hope itself becomes for the time an abiding presence and a solace—and after the campfire, repose under the heavens;—repose, not sleep, for to be unconscious in the presence of such as these seemed a sacrilege. And through the silent watches of the night, as the points of light filling the lofty dome of the world swept across the face of the night, the senses were wooed into a mightier and deeper love for the material world itself.

And then the morning. Venus, leading forth in beauty her train of morning stars over the eastern hills; the first faint suggestions of light deepening into flame as the sun rose from out the volcanic regions of the East, and against the warm heavens were cut in clear relief the awful ranges of desolate mountains rising rank on rank until lost beyond the distant horizon. These were the experiences given into one day, and as memory at this moment gathers up its pictures and recounts again its delights I hear within, the expectant heart singing to herself, "Some day I'll wander back again."

Three days were thus spent at Onion Valley; the time filled in with visits to points of interest, and then came the breaking up. Some turning homeward, and those remaining, with faces westward, determined upon a grander domain and a larger mountain experience.

Judge Conklin, his family and guests, made up the homeward bound, while the advancing party was augmented by Mrs. Rhoda Robinson and son, of Independence, who were to act as guides into the region lying between the summit of the Sierras and King's River, itself.

A somewhat large experience in camping life had taught us the necessities of organization for complete enjoyment and the smooth current of temper; so on our first day we marshalled our forces into order and set each in his place with established duties. Thus organized from day to day without jar or discontent, we enjoyed to its full each day's especial pleasure.

On the afternoon of August 28th we camped along the shores of a beautiful lake spread out at the base of that peak which half fills the gap in the mountains at the head of Kearsarge Cañon, and plainly visible from Independence. Seen from the valley this summit, lifting as it does from a tangled mass of mountains, discloses but little of its grandeur. Here, however, a noble pile, rising in solid columns of granite and looming over the great lake at its base, an eloquent and majestic mountain. Along the shores of this fair mountain lake as day declined, we watched the sporting trout crowding its limited waters, and gathered the exquisite flowers that bloom in that high altitude—some fare and delicate as lace and others flaming in rich and gaudy colors; and as we gathered them we asked again and again, "Why do these delicate blooms adorn such wild and far off places?" for it seemed their place should be among the abodes of men for they "Are written words, which rightly read

Will lead you from earth's fog and sod,
To hope, goodness and God."

And thus, how impotent are our questionings of the world. We move amid the wonders of creation with half closed eyes, with dumb affections and dead hearts; feeding of husks while within our reach is a feast spread for us by a God! How often we question His very existence, and sit in judgment upon the wisdom of his plans; doubting His awful affection, though from generation to generation the violet blooms in beauty and the soil sweetens with its delicate fragrance the breath of the centuries.

From this camp we climbed to the summit of the Sierras—a sharp and ragged edge of rock lifted to a height so great that one standing upon its narrow rim seems, as he looks off over a vast range of vision, to soar rather than to stand—suspended from the heavens, rather than fixed upon the firm and solid earth. He must hold his heart with iron hand or that heart be insensible who is not moved by the view disclosed from this summit. At your feet lies a deep blue lake hemmed by precipices as desperate as death. Westward a chain of silver lakes reposing in the laps of green meadows, while everywhere, piercing the lofty heavens, mighty mountain ranges, majestic and beautiful, rise and tower and shine—indeed "the delectable mountains" leading forth in vast processions into the dim distance and looming into the deeps of the far off skies in attitude of transcendent majesty and grace. This measureless sweep of distance is full of awe, for the senses seem to swim as the eye ranges through it, and suggestions of a vaster beyond fascinate the mind.

Though piled and massed and tossed in a seeming confusion, these mountain shapes are yet obedient to a law which, in their building, wrought into them grandeur and grace and beauty inexpressible. The climax of grandeur is made up by beauty which rises from grade to grade until beauty alone no longer expresses to the mind the magnificence it holds. As we stood upon this summit and looked forth upon the panorama, we laughed at the toil expended in the climb to it. It exhilarated as a glass of wine the pulses, and made the mind as sweet as a song.

Another sunset and another camp. A lake again—deep, pure and serene, above a noble mountain. The fame of this lake as a fishing ground determined us for a protracted camp along its shores. That its situation may be fixed surely, for the benefit of those who may desire to visit it, we give its direction as due west from the summit and distant about five miles. It is the largest and last of the series that form the chain described as visible from the summit of Kearsarge [illegible]. It is the finest lake for fish in this entire region, not only on account of size and quality of fish, but in number and the ease and certainty with which they are taken as well. In size the trout inhabiting it range from one half to two and three pounds each. The very waters render their flesh firm and sweet, and it need not be written that, cooked as trout should be, they make a feast for a king.

For five days and nights we lingered here, fishing by day and night; indeed, our experience was that in the moonlight, (which was then at its full), greater success rewarded the fisherman than during the hours of the day. It was a special sport—full of exhilaration; to stand along under the full round moon; ever and anon to cast out the deep waters of the lake, to send the trout flying and shining through the moonlit air. Though such sport to us, it had at least its pang, for as we watched the splendid fish struggle with its death, we could but pity its distress. Across its bright eye, used to the deeps of waters and the loftiness of the sky, there came a film; its flecked sides, shining and beautiful, paling as life slowly fade out and its glorious beauty was dead; all faded, as fades the light out of an evening sky. Poor dumb beauty! you shall yet have your revenge, for all beauty that exists or will exist, shall, like you, yield at last all its fascination up to the same dread power that robs thee of thy life!

We have no hesitation in recommending the lake to the sportsman and promise to him ample compensation for all the trials of trail or camp. The distance from Independence can be accomplished in a single day; and aside from the sport afforded by rod and line, the grandeur of the surroundings cannot fail to command interest and delight. To us the camp was an experience wonderful and sweet.

For hours we lay on the shores of that lake, half in dream—like an infant on its mother's bosom half asleep; its lips just parted with a smile of infinite delight.

And could we wish "couch more magnificent?" The heavens above us all one with brilliant day; lofty mountains near and afar proclaiming their kinship with the spirit because they are imperishable; the bannered pine swaying above us to the breath of the breeze; the plash of waters moved by the gentle wind, soothing like a lullaby; continents of summer cloud hanging in the sky, and taking on fantastic shapes as they slowly float beyond the far off hills; and then the day's decline as it slid into the night, with burning heavens in the west—summits touched with flame and awful slopes of snow baptized with rosy light. Of such as these lead us not from out the mind's deep moods of care and weariness, and lay no gentle touch upon the tired chords of our life, we indeed fulfill the Scriptures for having eyes we see not, and having ears we hear not, and we but "Nourish a blind life within the brain." The complete was as full of inexpressible of dreams, for these came over the physical senses such a spell of delicious laziness, that motion seemed a sin.

But we looked towards the west and the splendor of the view grew upon the mind. Indolence fell from us as easily as a prince's disguise in a pantomime, and we pressed forward, expectation quickened by the promise of things grander than those yet seen. Domes and towers and pinnacles, cathedral and palace and temple rose in front of us along the line of the sky, set in seats of power and expressed in massive pieces of rock. The contour of the mountains gives them a noble expression which charms beyond their [illegible] and height and bulk. Then [illegible] so often assuming the forms we have expressed, humanizes them, and we softens to sympathy, though it be for insensible rock, as we stand in their presence.

In the early morning, as we rode out from the grove of pines in which had been pitched our camp, at the shore of Lake Rhoda, (for so we had named it), our guide, pointing to a magnificent dome rising several thousand feet above an awful cañon wall, a pure, solid mass of granite, said: "That is Bubbs' Creek Hill." And as we lifted our eyes to that perfect dome so graceful and massive and mighty, adding a glory to the sky into which it was lifted, and itself made glorious by its lofty solitude in the sky—swelling as it towered with all the lines of power, of grace, and of beauty—we groaned as we sighed that anything so splendid should ever be known as "Bubbs' Creek Hill;" as we halted our train that we might take in the whole grand view of which this dome was but a part, we said: "Let us undo a wrong, and rechristen that mountain; and from henceforth let it be to us the 'Dome of St. Peters;'" so it was agreed, and so it is, and if any one who reads this shall ever penetrate the region we traversed, he will need no guide-book to point out to him this noble and beautiful creation, if he will recall to memory the "Dome of St. Peters."

The trail leading to Bubbs' Creek and its magnificent cañon, from Lake Rhoda, follows the edge of a mountain meadow some five miles in length, gently sloping to the west, and through which a mountain stream tumbles and dashes along. If one could follow this meadow through its heart it would be an easy ride; but the softness of the ground prevents, and safety is found along its edges where the mountain side furnishes firm and solid footing. This fact we were thoroughly taught after our pack mules had twice, within half an hour, hopelessly mired and tumbled our bedding and provisions into the soft black muck which made up the soil of the meadow. The last mile of the trail lies along the base of the "Dome of St. Peter's," and descends, with terrible swiftness, down—down into the cañon known as the "Bubbs' Creek Cañon"—we write the misnomer to quotations, but even then it is hard enough to link this grand cañon, rivaling Yosemite in grandeur and beauty, with such a name—"Bubbs!" And we wondered why those who claim, by discovery, the right to name such as these, so often so little appreciate "the eternal fitness of things." But after all, we must deal with things, as well as with men, as we find them; and so we must say, though it be always with a smile, "Bubbs' Creek Cañon;" which we declare to be a dream of splendors, full of beauty, and enriched by grandeur that neither I nor any one else can ever describe by pencil or brush or pen, but as a faint suggestion of the real. Yosemite was built upon a larger but not a grander plan. For over thirty miles, in an almost eastward and westward direction, this cañon cuts through the heart of the Sierras—not only the heart, but where they culminate in hight and magnificence. It heads in the mass of awful mountains that group around Mt. Whitney, and winds through a region wild and lone and silent, except where the voices of the waterfall and the roar of the cataract break the solitude.

Here our pen halts and hesitates, and the mind waits, as we attempt to describe this cañon; and yet we must, though it be at last as like it as the Hindoo's dumb of mud is like unto a Greek God.

But come with me. Stand a moment within our camp, and you can almost lay your hand upon a sheer precipice four thousand feet in height—a clear uplift of unbroken granite against whose face the centuries have warred in vain; and as you slowly lift the eye from its base toward its crown, and take in the height and measure the tremendous force of which it is the exposition, you are but being trained to appreciate the multitude of kindred creations that make up the great walls of this wonderful cañon. For over thirty miles these walls rise in majestic attitudes—full of glorious surprises, and so eloquent with strength and nobleness and beauty that beauty at length is lost in something greater than beauty, and it becomes a vast empire of grandeur that rises from expression to expression until it becomes a magnificence beyond descriptive art. Each step changes the view. Advance in any direction is but a constant unfolding of wonders until the mind feels a sense of pain that it cannot take in all the splendor and make it a permanent presence forever.

Fronting our camp, from out the deeps and cool of forests which crown and glorify the edge of awful cliffs three graceful waterfalls leap into the air—

And like a downward smoke * * *
Along the cliff to fall and pause, and fall did seem.

The distance through which these waters fall before they touch the cañon floor is several thousand feet, though not perpendicular, for in places the waters glide over the smooth slope, which motion is as graceful as the movements of the waltz—is really more fascinating than the sheer leap of the fall. Against the severe faces of these tremendous cliffs here and there a noble pine clings, its roots fixed in the solid rock—a picture of Beauty reposing upon the breast of Force. The vegetation and flood of the Sierras fill up the deep recesses of the cañon through which Bubbs Creek, a splendid mountain stream, dashes along; now leaping a fall, now foaming through the cataract, at each step changing its current and song. Its dash and roar adds a presence of life and vigor and breaks up what would otherwise be the very despotism of silence. As a fishing ground nothing could exceed this creek along its entire length. It is absolutely crowded with trout of all varieties, ever hungry—yes, voracious for the hook. A more delightful spot for the sportsman could not be found within the Sierras—ever imagined—to be who cannot here within an hour fill his string must be set down as a failure. To those to whom trout fishing is a passion we say: That one day's experience and sport here will compensate for all toil and cost expended in reaching it. At Independence at all times guides, mule trains and equipments can be readily obtained at small cost. The C. & C. railroad reaches Independence, rendering the trip to this point one of ease and expedition. Yosemite has become somewhat tame by reason of its accessibility. Familiarity breeds contempt, of material as well as human things. This is a wild, new; untrodden field, full of wonder, interest, adventure and delight. We must pause for want of space, but we cannot before we recall a picture, so inexpressibly beautiful that it even yet again and again returns as in the dreams of the night:

It is sunset at the head waters of King's River. From our camp we look not up to, but down into the depths of sky. The great round sun, magnified in the telescopic air, hangs over a tangled mass of mountains and floods summit and slope, and cavern and cliff. Long lines of summit seem to break like luminous forms against the Western heavens. The towering peaks lift like islands of light; the aspiring pinnacles tower like shafts of fire along the glowing ridge, and the flaming west flushes and flames as if it had a spirit and was conscious of the indescribable beauty it creates, and as this wonderful picture was fixed within the mind we uttered a proverb so long as a prayer:

"And to the beautiful order of thy works,
Learn to conform the order of thine own."

WILLIAM CHEVERIA, alias Skinner, formerly well known in Virginia City has gone insane in San Francisco.

HENRY CLAY, grandson of the brilliant "Harry of the West," was shot in a saloon in Louisville, Kentucky, last Sunday morning. Clay wanted to borrow money from the saloon keeper, a man named Weiper; was refused, became abusive, got a pistol, threatened to shoot Weiper and was killed. Clay was aged 33 years and was a lawyer of brilliant but dissipated. He was the only relative of the illustrious statesman who inherited his oratorical ability; he was unmarried.

A PENNSYLVANIA paper lately published an entertaining article on a large engine at Friedensville in that state. The engine is used for pumping water from mines in charge of Capt John Eudy brother of Mr. Eudy who used to be engaged in mining in this vicinity. The dimentions and capacity of the big engine are given as follows. Gallons water per minute from a depth of 3[illegible] feet, 17,500. The driving wheels are thirty-five feet in diameter and weigh forty tons each. The cylinder is 11 inches in diameter while the piston-rod is eighteen inches in diameter and makes a ten foot stroke. The engine has a ballast box capable of holding sixty tons, and solid chunks of iron weighing several tons apiece are placed in a box as the depth of the shaft increases. On the engine "President" also the largest nut in the world. It is hexagonal in shape and weighs 16 pounds. To tighten or loosen this nut twenty men are required, while the wrench that fits it is twenty feet long. It is a pleasure to report that there is a strong probability of having our Captain Eudy back here again at his old post before long.

CERTIFICATES.—At the examination last week, of applicants for teacher's certificates R. S. Peeler and James Reynolds each got a second grade certificate. These were the only certificates granted.

FOR THE ORPHANS.—Mr. Bender writes that donations of fruit for the orphans at Carson will be carried over the C & C road free of charge, if properly boxed and delivered at the railroad on Tuesdays only of each week.

THE TICKET.—In the advertisement of the Democratic ticket the names of the members of the new County Central Committee will be found. The Convention endorsed the nomination of R. F. Del Valle for Congress and D. L. Deal, of Mono, for the Assembly.

SORGHUM.—This product is successfully raised at Bishop Creek. From something less than a half acre of ground Mr. McCroskey obtained this season forty seven gallons of very fine syrup. R. A. Clark has raised sorghum for several years, and always with success.

DIPLOMAS.—Bennie E. Lasky and Max M. Skinner received diplomas of graduation from the Board of Education. This is alike creditable to the boys and their teachers. These were the first diplomas ever gained in the southern end of the county.

MODEST MERIT.—There are two persons in particular to whom especial thanks are due for constant and hard labor in preparing for the presentation of "East Lynne." These two did an actual amount of hard toil that can hardly be appreciated; and as their work was mostly such drudgery as attracted but little attention, and yet was so necessary to be done, the greater is the merit of Bertrand Rhine and Frank Wheeler.

ARE COMING.—The Collins Comedy Company are coming, and will arive about October 10th. The Company will play in Bishop Creek, Independence and Lone Pine. The Collins company have a very good reputation for ability in their line, and will no doubt give an entertainment that will be very pleasing. A hearty laugh, when it is had with and not at a fellow creature is cheap at any price. Due notice will be given of the exact date of the performance.

ANOTHER PRODUCT.—One more product for which Owens valley may yet become famous is cheese. A specimen cheese sent to the printing office by Mrs. Joseph Steward, of Big Pine, would be remarkable any where for excellence. Persons who like the article should give an order to Mrs. Steward. What taste and industry can do in making a pretty home is shown where this cheese is made. Fruits and flowers in abundance reward the toil bestowed and add the pleasure of sentiment to the certainty of gain.

GRATIFYING SUCCESS.—The young people made a most complete success in their presentation of the play of "East Lynne" last Monday evening. The house was completely jammed by the audience, many of whom expected to find their only amusement in laughing at the mistakes and blunders of the preformers. But from begining to end not a single serious mistake was made. The more pathetic scenes of the play were rendered with such painful reality that gray beards were wet with tears, and sobs could be heard from all over the house. The play itself has very little, indeed not any literary merit, and the effect upon the audience was entirely due to the perfectly natural and earnest way in which each character was presented. The most just criticism that can be made upon the performance, is to call to mind the fact that the levity in which some were prepared to indulge was never seen, but instead thereof, the most thoughtless and giddy were awed into silence and respectful attention, if not moved to deep emotion. In good truth the preformance was so full of merit as to be a good deal of surprise to some old theatre goers. Regret was expressed by friends of the preformers that few if any, have ever seen the play preformed by professional actors. We are of opinion, on the contrary, that to this fact much of the success was due. No one of the young people copied a bad model, each studied the part assigned and rendered it as nature inspired. When all did so well it would not be just or judicious to make particular mention of individuals and all who took part in the performance are entitled to high praise.

Personal Mention.

Mrs. Mairs is now improving rapidly in health.

Mrs. J. S. Gorman, who was quite ill, is now much better.

A. McKellip was over from Chrysopolis last Tuesday.

Miss Emily Flowers lately arrived here on a visit to her sister, Mrs. O. I. Mairs.

B. J. McClusky left Bishop Creek last Wednesday for Madera, Fresno county.

Mr. Garlick came down from Ena last Tuesday. Every thing is in good order at the furnace.

Pat. Clinton never had a pleasanter visit to Independence; he thanks all friends, old and new, for kind attentions.

Miss Grace McAfee left for home last Tuesday morning. Miss McAfee made many friends during her short stay in Independence who deeply regretted her departing so soon.

MINING ITEMS.

DARWIN.

In Darwin Mr. J. C. Eddy is doing a good deal of work. Not long since after a run of fourteen days with five stamps he cleaned up $9,000. The bullion contained gold and silver. Mr. Eddy some time since leased the Revenue mine from Robert Mitchell; he has had men steadily at work there since and now has a good deal of ore in sight. The veins run from six inches to two feet in width and is all milling ore. The best quality contains three hundred dollars per ton. Mr. Eddy says that in Snow's Canyon there are thousands of tons of ore that contains not less than twenty dollars per ton. Some weeks ago a shipment of ore was made that netted $272.50 per ton in San Francisco.

In the Silver Mountain mine at Old Coso, Mr. Eddy has a number of men at work. There are now three hundred tons of ore on the dump. The ore from this region was formerly hauled to mill at Olancha, but as there is plenty of timber on the ground and much ore in sight Mr. Eddy thinks seriously of putting up a mill at the mine.

HUNTERS CANYON

Hunter's Canyon on the east side of the range, Beveridge district, still displays the beautiful ways of the olden time. Messrs. Thomas McDonough and W. C. Kesling own and run a little 36 inch pan in Acastra ravine. The miners bring their ore in little dabs; "chiquacas" the quantities ranging from twenty pounds to a ton. The ore is worked and the bullion handed to the owner, who has in most instances sat around waiting for the completion of the operation. No ore of less value than fifty dollars per ton will be touched by the miners many of their "chiquacas" and away up into the hundreds of dollars per ton. This ore is all gold bearing. Messrs. McDonough and Kesling are now extending their works by putting in a new 28 feet wheel; the present wheel is but 12 feet in diameter. The new wheel will work two pans and a small battery of stamps. The miners do not tie themselves down to steady drudgery; a few days work, a few "chiquacas" of rich ore a trip to the pan, a chance of bullion a trip to Lone Pine or Independence, continued until the proceeds are spent, and then back to the mine. Energetic work and modern methods would work wonders in Hunter's canyon.

CERRO GORDO.

Pat Clinton and others made a shipment of ore last week from Cerro Gordo to San Francisco. The ore will net the owners about two hundred dollars per ton.

Mr. Crapo, in the same locality, has a large quantity ore ore ready for shipment. All of this ore is within about eight miles of the railroad and costs fifteen dollars to ship. Four years ago ore shipped by wagon to Mohave, and thence by rail to San Francisco cost sixty dollars per ton. This great reduction of expense will bring into market vast bodies of ore that formerly could not be handled at all.

John Thomas, an old resident of Inyo, returned from Arizona to Cerro Gordo a few months ago and resumed work on an old claim. He finds Inyo a much better country for mines than Arizona. He now has a good deal of ore in sight that will go three hundred dollars per ton.

In the Ignacio mine, one of the Cerro Gordo group, good developments have been made recently and a large amount of ore is now in sight.

KEELER.

About twenty tons of valuable ore was shipped from Keeler to San Francisco last Monday.

Four gold bricks were shipped from Keeler by express last Monday. The total value of the shipment was not stated but it will be a large sum.

Last Monday a fire at Eureka, Nevada, destroyed $60,000 worth of property. The whole amount of insurance is but $17,000. On Tuesday there was a big fire in the neighboring town of Ruby Hill.

BLUE BELL

The Blue Bell is in the Inyo range, east of the Polita; the mine belongs to Peter Laird, and is one of many claims located in the same region. That whole district is only begining to be prospected, and already there is evidence enough that it contains many valuable ledges. Mr. Laird has a lot of ore now ready for shipments to the Ena furnace. Samples of this ore give an assay value of $100 to $190 per ton. The ore must be packed two and a half miles, and hauled ten miles to the railroad,

FREEBORN CANYON.

M. G. Nixon made a shipment of gold bullion from Freeborn Canyon last Wednesday. The mine is now looking better than ever and all concerned are well pleased with the outlook.

Here and There.

—L. Wood is now unpacking a large stock of new goods.

—"Let me wrest in peace," as the hawk said to the hunter.

—Harris & Rhine received ten tons of barbed wire yesterday.

The linnet is now the favorite bird in Independence—that is, the East Lynnet.

DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION.

A Large Gathering Warm Contests—All Decided Decently and in Order.

Delegates began to arrive as early as Friday of last week and by Sunday morning a majority were in town. Candidates were on hand and as busy as bees; the bees, however, work only through the shining hours; the more industrious candidates worked all night, or at least as long as a delegate could be kept awake. All the candidates had staunch friends who stuck firm till the last minute and when the convention was called to order no one of them could claim that a majority of votes would be cast in his favor. It was evident, however, that local considerations would have much influence and that the nomination for sheriff would determine most of the others. The Convention was at 10 A. M. on Monday by District Attorney Laird, Chairman of the County Central Committee. Mr. Laird addressed the Convention at some length; said that the party had now entered upon a gallant fight under the two trusted leaders Cleveland and Hendricks. That the ranks were firm and full of enthusiasm, and that the cry should be that of the gallant 69th Irish regiment, "Faugh a' Ballach." Claimed for the Democratic party the accomplishment of every good thing since the establishment of the colonies, including the birth and deeds of Washington. Said the war of 1812 was a Democratic measure, declared and fought for the maintenance of Democratic principles. Recalled the action of Captain Ingram in the case of Kosta, said that was a Democratic action, and a Democratic Congress voted a medal and vote of thanks to Ingram for his gallantry. Mr. Laird then discussed the tariff question; said there was no truth in the assertion that the Democratic party was in favor of free trade, and claimed that the Chicago platform meant all the protection that was necessary for the protection of American interests. To illustrate the workings of the present tariff policy the speaker described the sugar operations of Claus Spreckels. Said that the Democratic party is opposed to all corporations and to granting any special privileges. That nearly all corporators, corporations and directors of corporations were Republicans. Asserted that this was true of the C. & C. railroad, and the managers of that road had warned employees not to attend a Democratic Primary under the pain of dismissal, but that the warning had been despised and the Primary attended. The land grants question was then discussed and the speaker asserted that all the great land grants to railroads had been made by Republicans. Republican policy tended to centralization; Republicans spoke more of the Nation than the State, and this had always been so. Mr. Laird denounced as a great evil the privilege granted corporations of appealing from the State to Federal Courts; said this was due to Republican rule and that Democratic policy would not permit any interference with State affairs. The action of the Federal Courts in construing the Fourteenth Amendment to the the Constitution to permit corporations to appeal from State to Federal Courts was condemned as a Republican innovation for the purpose of depriving the State of power to try its own cases. In reference to the Chinese Mr. Laird and Mr. Blaine favored the bill for their exclusion and Mr. Logan opposed it, therefore it is not possible to tell what is Republican doctrine on that question. The speaker said in conclusion that the one thing needed was reform, and the way to secure that was by getting rid of Republicans and putting Democrats in their places; he therefore urged all to vote for Cleveland and Hendricks.

CALLED TO ORDER

TEMPORARY ORGANIZATION.

On the conclusion of Mr. Laird's speech D. B. Curtis was proposed as temporary chairman and was elected by acclamation. James E. Parker was chosen temporary secretary. The usual committees were appointed and the convention adjourned till 1 P. M.

CONVENTION REASSEMBLED.

The delegates were all on hand promptly. Mr. Curtis called the Convention to order and a permanent organization was effected by the reelection of the temporary officers. Reports of committees were received and accepted. All precincts were represented and but few proxies were offered. Committee on Resolutions submitted that all candidates be required to support the ticket, which was unanimously adopted, as was also the following:

PLATFORM:

The Democracy of the County of Inyo, State of California, in Convention assembled, do hereby resolve and declare:

1. That we reaffirm and indorse the principles of the Democratic party as expounded in the National and State platforms and that we pledge our earnest support to Grover Cleveland of New York, for President of the United States and for Thomas A. Hendricks, of Indiana, for Vice-President.

2. We assert that the Democratic party is a grand organization for the people and of the people, and by the acts of its representatives in Congress and our State Legislature has proven itself a foe to the power of corporate monopolies and all Government fraud and corruption; that we arraign the Republican party as a servile tool of money and monopoly, as shown by the almost unanimous expressions of the representatives of that party in the Legislature, and by the character of the associations of the Delegates sent to the Republican National Convention, no less than by the character and record of the nominees of said Convention.

3. That we indorse the actions of our Democratic State Board of Equalization in conforming to the pledges given by its members to the people; by increasing the valuation of railroad property to figures proportionate to the valuation fixed on other property for purposes of taxation. That we are in favor of an amendment to the State Constitution forever fixing a maximum rate for fares and freights on all railroads in this State.

4. That we indorse the action of Governor Stoneman in calling the extra session of the Legislature; that the same was wise and politic, and would have resulted in great good to the State had not its wise and judicious measures been defeated by the corruption and corrupt practices of a large majority of the Republican members, backed by the support of a few traitorous Democrats.

5. That we demand the enactment of such laws relative to the levy and collection of taxes as will compel the railroads of this State to pay their equal proportion thereof to the end that the same may be collected promptly at the same time and in the same manner as are the taxes of private individuals.

6. That we commend the Democratic party as the proven exponent of sound anti-monopoly principles in this State as shown by Democratic representatives in the Legislature.

7. That it is the duty of the Government to foster and protect the interests of the laboring classes whenever and wherever such interests require protection, and that labor shall be elevated and protected. "A proper care for the workingmen is inseparably connected with our institutions."

8. That upon the thorough education and enlightenment of the masses depends the perpetuity of American institutions, and we are therefore in favor of the enactment of such laws as will best advance the cause of education.

9. That we are in favor of the rigid enforcement of the Monroe doctrine to the end that none but a Republican form of Government shall be allowed to dominate on the Western Continent; that all American citizens, wherever dispersed around the earth, shall be protected with all the might and power of this Government.

10. That we indorse the nomination of R. F. Del Valle for Member of Congress from this District, he by his public acts in the State Legislature having proved himself a true and tried friend of the people, and beyond the power of corruption.

11. That, in full recognition of the principle of regular rotation of legislative representation by this and Mono counties, we do hereby indorse and ratify the nomination of Dr. E. L. Deal for Member of State Assembly; that we will, in any event of change by the Mono county Democracy, also indorse and ratify their action.

12. That the salaries of certain officers of this county as were fixed by the last Legislature are exhorbitant and out of all proportion to our population and taxable property; that we demand and insist that such official compensation shall be reduced by the next Legislature to reasonable and just figures, in proportion to the responsibilities in private life. Also, that Inyo county should not be so classed as to require the services of five Supervisors, we deeming that any three good and responsible citizens and taxpayers can sufficiently well perform all the functions of that office.

13. That the County Central Committee be and is hereby instructed to cause to be printed upon the ballots to be used at the next election the words,

FOR—
CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT NO. 2—YES

NOMINATIONS

Were next in order and for Superior Judge E. Robinson nominated the present incumbent, John A. Hannah. There were no other names presented and Judge Hannah was nominated by acclamation. His Honor was called before the convention; he took the pledge straight and promised to go the whole ticket. Mr. Hessian nominated S. G. Gregg for sheriff; David Olds nominated J. S. McGee, P. Clinton presented the name of J. J. Gunn and E. Robinson nominated J. R. Eldred. All of the candidates announced their undying faith in the principles of Democracy and promised unflinching support to the ticket in any event. This was expected to be the hottest struggle of the convention. Three of the candidates had made a close canvass of the county and each had a strong following of staunch friends. It was further understood that the nomination for sheriff would have great influence on the delegates in selecting candidates for the other offices.

FIRST BALLOT.

The result of the first ballot was watched with the keenest interest and when the tickets were counted the vote was found to stand, for Gunn, 13; for Gregg, 13; McGee, 11; Eldred, 2; necessary to choice, 20. The Chair ordered the

SECOND BALLOT

And this showed considerable change, as follows: Gunn, 13; Gregg, 11; McGee, 15; Eldred, 0.

THIRD BALLOT.

It was a surprise to many that Gregg was proving a weaker candidate than was expected. Personally Mr. Gregg is highly esteemed and respected and has made an excellent officer during his one term; but the friends of candidates for other offices were more concerned about them than about him. The result of this ballot was for Gunn, 15; Gregg, 9; McGee, 15.

FOURTH BALLOT.

No time was lost and the next ballot was at once ordered and resulted, for McGee, 17; Gregg, 7; Gunn, 15.

FIFTH BALLOT.

More chopping. McGee polled 14 votes; Gunn, 16; Gregg, 8; Eldred, 1.

SIXTH BALLOT.

On this ballot McGee's friends resumed their allegiance; the result was McGee, 17; Gunn, 15; Gregg, 7.

RECESS TAKEN.

Delegates began to get nervous and restless and it was proposed to take a recess of a few minutes. Confident in the final success of their favorite, but dreading the chance of bargains the friends of McGee stoutly opposed this move but the majority of delegates decided to take a recess of five minutes. With watch in hand Chairman Curtis watched the fleeting moments, and the instant time was up called to order again.

SEVENTH BALLOT.

The result of this ballot showed that nothing had been accomplished during the recess. The vote stood for McGee, 16; Gunn, 15; Gregg, 8

EIGHTH BALLOT.

Slight change. McGee, 18; Gunn, 14; Gregg, 7.

NINTH BALLOT.

On this ballot it was evident that Gregg had no chance for the nomination. The vote stood for McGee, 17; for Gunn, 17; Gregg, 5. When the Chair stated the result Mr. Gregg asked the attention of the Convention, and this being granted he withdrew from the contest and requested his friends to vote according to their convictions of right and in the interest of the public good.

TENTH AND LAST BALLOT.

The defeated candidate on this ballot could not complain of any lack of fidelity among his friends; they fought the battle gallantly to the last. The vote was found to stand for McGee, 29 Gunn, 19.

COUNTY CLERK.

For the office of County Clerk John Shepherd placed in nomination W. L. Hunter. E. Robinson presented the name of Thomas Crough. Of the votes Hunter received 21; Crough 18.

DISTRICT ATTORNEY.

The present incumbent, Mr. Laird, was nominated by acclamation.

TREASURER.

For the office of Treasurer there was quite a lively competition. A. W. Eibeshutz was nominated by Mr. Hessian, J. J. Moore by Mr. Beasely and W. W. Yandell by Mr. Howell. The first ballot stood for Eibeshutz, 14; Moore, 10; Yandell, 15. Second ballot, Eibeshutz, 16; Moore, 10; Yandell, 14. Third ballot, Eibeshutz, 16; Moore, 12; Yandell, 11. Fourth ballot, Eibeshutz, 15; Moore, 14; Yandell, 10. Fifth ballot; Eibeshutz, 18; Moore, 9; Yandell, 12.

RECESS.

A recess was taken of ten minutes and when the convention was again called to order Mr. Yandell announced his withdrawal from the contest. The result of the sixth and last ballot was for Eibeshutz, 22 votes; for Moore, 17 votes.

CORONER AND PUBLIC ADMINISTRATOR.

For these joint offices G. W. Brady and Dr. H. H. Howell were the candidates. Brady received 23 votes; Howell, 16.

SURVEYOR.

John Alexander was nominated for County Surveyor by acclamation. He very decidedly refused to accept; said he had been personally abused and scratched from the ticket on former occasions and would not consent to a repetition of such usage. One or two delegates admitted the bad treatment of Mr. Alexander by the party but urged that the nomination be now forced upon him, which was done, Mr. Alexander not making any further response. For Supervisors E. Robinson was nominated from the 3d District and J. C. Eddy from the 5th District. The delegates from the remaining districts asked time to confer with their constituents before making nominations and this was granted. This concluded the business of the meeting, and with a vote of thanks to the Chairman and Secretary, and cheers for the ticket, the Convention adjourned sine die. The whole proceedings were marked with harmony and good order, which it is but just to say may, in part at least, be attributed to the ability of Mr. Curtis as Chairman.

A TERRIBLE CRIME.—A correspondent gives the following account of a terrible crime committed near Bishop Creek. The inaction of the officers in the matter excited the deep and just indignation of the correspondent. The District Attorney is the proper person to inform Deputy Sheriffs and Constables of their duties.

BISHOP CREEK, Sept. 24, 1884.

Mr. Editor:—Last Friday while the Pintes were celebrating one of their fete days and while the dance was going on, an Indian leaped into the circle and in a brutal and cowardly manner cut the throat of a squaw who was participating in the dance. It is said that she was a doctress and had predicted the death of an Indian who at present is unwell; and for this she was foully butchered. Be this as it may, it seems to me that in a civilized community like this, where we elect and have officers to protect all like, that something should be done in this matter. Our Deputy Sheriff looks idly on and says, "I can't do anything," our constable says the same, and so it goes until another and another is slaughtered under our very eyes without investigation, or hardly comment from our officers.

Now this seems to be all wrong. Where in any other civilized community would this be tolerated? In San Francisco, in Los Angeles, in Independence, or any other city or town? No! But because it is a few miles in the country, and hardly called our own door yard, our present officers do not deem it worthy of their notice. Shame! Shame! is the general cry of our inhabitants, but nothing is done. Can you inform the officers of their duties in such cases through your journal?

CITIZEN.

REDUCED FARE.—On the arrival of all trains at Independence station, comfortable conveyance and good horses are in attendance to carry passengers to any part of town for fifty cents each.

The world is saved by the breath of school children.

Youth and Will may resist, but Nature takes revenge in silence.

Old age is a tyrant that forbids the pleasure of youth on pain of death.

Woe unto them who give scant measure and exact full measure from others.

If a word spoken in its time is worth one peice of money, silence in its time is worth two.

"The ungrateful" says Xenophon "are neither fit to serve the gods, their country, nor their friends."

Authors from whom others steal should not complain, but rejoice. Where there is no game there are no poachers.

"When a woman," says Balzac, "is no longer jealous of her husband the end has come; she no longer loves him.

Self made men are often like home made furniture. Strong and reliable but lacking finish.—[Philadelphia Call.

M. Renan's receipt for happiness is the disinterested pursuit of science, art, human welfare, or the country's service.

Of no use are the men who study to do as exactly as was done before, who can never understand that to day is a new day.

The seashore is really the most delightful place to spend the summer. Between watching the bathers on the shore and the ships off the shore the mind has no time to be pondering over the momentus question how many pounds of beef all the salt in ocean would corn.

It is always well to be well-informed. She—"Who's my sister's partner, vis-a-vis, with the star and ribbon? He—'Oh, he—ar—he's Sir Sir—dear me, I forgot his name—but, you know, he went somewhere or other to look after that scientific feller—what was his name?—you know, who was lost or something, or else killed by some one!"

An exchange thinks "the time may come when the thunder storms be called up by artificial means," Come? why, bless you, it is here. The only artificial means necassary is to get up a Sunday school picnic. There may be an occasional failure but it is about as reliable as anything on this ever-changing globe—save death and taxes.

About two hundred different guide books to summer resorts have been received in this office. They are very pretty, but lack something. We have been trying to think what it was for a month back, and it has just occured to us that the only thing to make them a thing of beauty and a joy forever is a pass accompanying each.

Never teach false morality. How exquisitely absurd to teach a girl that beauty is no value, dress of no use! Beauty is of value; her whole prospects and happiness in life may depend upon a new gown or a becoming bonnet; if she has five grains of commen sense she will find this out. The great thing to teach is their proper value, and that there must be something better under her bonnet than a pretty face for real happiness.

A talking bore in this city, and a medical man caught hold of the button of a gentleman's coat the other day, whom he met on Main street, and held him their in conversation. After a weary time of it the gentleman took out his penknife and cut the button off his coat, leaving it in the talking bore's hand. He never noticed that his friend had gone, bnt with the button between his fingers went on talking us lively as ever.

"Boys let's nominate a candidate for president," said a small boy to his companion the other day, after they had tired playing polo. "All right," was the response of the young urchin. After seyeral ballots one of the number was nominated. "Now, then, We've got to elect him said a little fellow; "that is the way to do it, ain't it?" "No" was the reply of the older boy; "some of you must bolt and throw mud at him. Then we will go on and elect him.

A rather stout gentleman of Irish extraction was walking slowly through the market one morning with a basket on his arm. On coming to a stall where a large owl was perched on a bar, he stopped and after inspecting it a few moments with a troubled expression on his countenance, his face lit up, and with a patronizing air he inquirod: "How much do you want fur yer broad faced goose?" with a very audible grin the proprietor said: "That's no goose; it's an owl." "O I don't care how ould it is; it's good enough for the boarders."

Re Stopped the Train.

'Queer incidents?' echoed a Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific conductor. 'Yes, we have a few. We meet all sorts of people, you know, under all sorts of circumstances. Some annoyances? I should remark. Only last week a little thing occurred that made me so mad I wanted to kill somebody. We were running out from Chicago and were an hour behind time. I had orders to side-track at Seneca for an east-bound special, provided I could get there by such a minute. We were going fast to make it, when all of of a sudden the engineer pulled up out in the country. I rushed out to see what the matter was, and we saw a farmer's boy a few rods down the track waving an old red shirt that he'd taken from a scarecrow in the field near by. I shouted to him to come up and tell us what was wrong. He sidled along bashfully, me all the the time yelling to him to tell us why he had stopped the train. When he got within about forty feet of the engine he skipped off the track and climbed the fence. Then he turned and said:

'Say, Mister, did ye hear how the Boston-Providence game cum out yisterday? Me and Jim Jackson has got a bet on it.' '

HEAVEN.

We dream, sometimes, of that dim, far-off land
Our journey's end, our home, second birth;
We only dream—we cannot understand
That wondrous riddance of the woes of earth.
No failure there, no loss and no decay,
No tempest, but clear shining after rain;
Like mists, life's myriad cares shall fade away,
While all good things we knew on earth remain

The singer's voice in sweeter strains shall rise;
The poet's verse in nobler numbers flow;
Fair landscapes wait the painter's raptured eyes,
And gazers on the stars at last shall know
The very heart of all their mysteries:
And Nature's faithful lovers shall not end
Their lifelong quest of blossoms, birds and bees,
But placid hours in peaceful woodcraft spend.

They who on earth were doomed to dwell
In crowded cities, heavy stifling air,
May wander through a cool and leafy dell
Beside fresh waters fringed with flowers rare.
The pale and shrunken victims of disease,
And they who writhed beneath the lash of pain,
Shall healing find in every passing breeze,
And all their pristine bounding strength regain.

The worker's worn and weary hands shall rest,
The bent back straightened in a gracious ease;
The heart cease aching in the mourner's breast;
The baffled student then may grasp the keys
Of soul and science and many a mighty truth,
And they who faint with age—life's last, worst ill—
Shall quaff the spring off sweet eternal youth,
And face the long, fair future, children still.

OLD FURNITURE.

The Present Popular Craze—Modern Manufacturers of Antiques.

"Anything in the way of old furniture will command a good price," was the remark of a dealer in antiques. "It does not make much difference what the article is, so long as it is genuine old furniture. There are, you know, a great many bogus antiques, and I believe there is a factory either in Maine or Connecticut where they can manufacture not only clocks, tables and bedsteads of the last century, but furniture that came out in the Mayflower. There is said to be another factory which makes nothing but spinning-wheels, and does a very profitable business. So far as I can see, old furniture made yesterday is as good as that made 150 years ago providing it is made as well and the purchasers do not know the difference. An acid stain gives just as good a color as the stain of time. I do not know but it is deeper and richer. Half the people who collect bric-a-brac have no idea why they collect it, except that they want to compete with their neighbors. It is a craze which has lasted a good deal longer than I thought it would, and is likely to last for some time to come.

"There are genuine antiques, however, and they bring good prices. Old clocks, when their pedigrees are known, cost high, and so do chests of drawers, tables, book cases and chairs. Old fire irons and brasses of every kind are in demand. As for spinning wheels, they readily bring good prices. If all the wheels which were in use in America a hundred years ago had been preserved to the present time, they would not begin to number as many as are exhibited in the parlors to-day. Outside of this, a great deal of old wood, genuine enough, is worked over into new forms. For instance, old bedsteads are not in demand as drawing-room ornaments, and people do not want them in their bedrooms. These bedsteads are carefully worked over into chairs, etc., and are utilized for repairing other old furniture. So, though the bedsteads are not salable in their own proper form, they yield a good profit when served up in other shapes.

"Now, as to prices. I have known fancy marquetry tables to bring as high a price as $1,000 each, Sideboards have brought $250, and clocks have sold for $500 each. Spinning wheels and well-finished chairs have brought from $25 to $100. There are cases where the workmanship is exceptional, where the figures run above this, and, of course, I am not speaking of furniture which has a well known historical value. There is a good deal of old furniture which dealers and speculators have been unable to buy from families who cherished their heirlooms, but most of all that is available has been picked up and put into the market. I could name you lots of houses where I know there is old furniture, which the descendants of the original owners refuse to sell, but I have my eye on it and will get most of it yet, if I live long enough and the antique craze continues. I do not make much profit on genuine antiques, for the owners are posted as to values nowadays. When the craze first started there were big profits, but the day for such bargains is not likely to come to us again."

—Boston Globe.

Bentzon: False friendship, like the ivy, decays and ruins the walls it embraces.

Growth of the United States.

The following statistics show the growth of the country since the year 1860.

Twenty-three years ago we were 30,000,000 of people; now we are over 50,000,000.

Then we had 141 cities and towns of over 8,000 inhabitants; now we have 286 of such cities and towns. Then the total population of our cities was 5,000,000; now it is about 12,000,000.

Our coal mines then produced 14,000,000 tons a year, now 85,000,000 tons a year, or six times as much.

The iron product amounted to 900,000 tons of oar; to-day it foots up over 8,000,000 tons a year, almost a nine-fold increase.

In 1860 our metal industries employed about 53,000 hands, consumed about $100,000,000 worth of material and turned out about $180,000,000 in annual products.

To-day these same industries employ 300,000 hands, consume $580,000,000 of material, and their annual product amounts to $560,000,000 a year.

In 1860 the wood industries employed 130,000 persons; to-day they employ 510,000, while the value of their annual product has trebled.

The woolen industry employed 60,000 persons then, and now employs 160,000, while our home mills, which produced goods of the value of $80,000,000 in 1860, now turn out an annual product worth $270,000,000.

Finally, there is cotton. In 1860 we imported 227,000,000 yards of cotton goods; in 1881 we only imported 25,000,000 yards.

In the meantime the number of hands employed in American cotton mills has increased to 200,000, and we export over 150,000,000 yards of cotton goods a year, instead of importing 227,000,000 yards, as we used to do.

The silk industry employed 5,000 persons; now it employs about 35,000, seven times as many.

We import no more silk goods now than we did in 1860, but our own mills, which produced goods of the value of $5,000,000 then, now turn out a product of over $40,000,000 yearly.

In 1860, 12,000 persons were employed in American pottery and stoneware works; to-day about 30,000 are employed in this industry.

The chemical industry, which employed 6,000 persons then, now employs 30,000.

In the meantime we have nearly five times as many miles of railways and double the number of farms, and yielding more than double the number of bushels of cereals.

In the production of sheep, we had 22,000,000 of them in 1860, to-day we have over 40,000,000 of them; and whereas we then produced in this country 60,000,000 pounds of wool, now we produce 240,000,000 pounds.

Finally, the total of our exports has doubled.

In 1860 it stood at $400,000,000 and now it stands at about $800,000,000.—Boston Traveler.

SOME CURIOUS FACTS.

There died recently in Savry a knife grinder who for years had followed his trade in Geneva, and left a fortune of 100,000 francs, all of which he bequeathed for division between three poor parishes, which should use it to buy clothing for children in need.

Another industry is now open to women. In an establishment on Center Street, New York, they are employed as gold beaters. The proprietor asserts that, while not equal to men in physical strength, they are superior in carefulness and delicacy of workmanship.

In opium joints and hasheesh houses, says the New York Sun, tea or water adulterated with aconite is used to heighten the effect of the drug upon the nerves and brain. This is almost the same excitant that was used by the New England witches, according to Professor Schele de Vere.

In Massachusetts women and children are driving men out of many industries. The trades in which the former are a very large majority are awnings and tents, buttons, dress trimmings, carpetings, clothing, cotton goods, woolens, fancy goods, flax and linen, hair work, hose, rubber, mixed textiles, paper, silks, sporting goods, straw goods and worsteds, twenty in all. Sixty trades show a preponderance of men.

Golden Rules.

The person who first sent these rules to be printed says truly, if any boy or girl thinks it would be hard work to keep so many of them in mind all the time, just think, also, what a happy place it would make of home if you only could:—

1. Shut every door after you, and without slamming it.
2. Never shout, jump or run in the house.
3. Never call to persons up-stairs or in the next room; if you wish to speak to them, go quietly where they are.
4. Always speak kindly and politely to servants, if you would have them do the same to you.
5. When you are told to do or not to do a thing by either parents, never ask why you should not do it.
6. Tell of your own faults and misdoings, and not those of your brothers and sisters.
7. Carefully clean the mud or snow off your boots before entering the house.
8. Be prompt at every meal hour.
9. Never sit down at the table or in the parlor with dirty hands or tumbled hair.
10. Never interrupt any conversation, but wait patiently your turn to speak.
11. Never reserve your good manners for company, but be equally polite at home and abroad.
12. Let your first, last and best friend be your mother.

These rules will make you a desirable companion.—Selected.

MOSQUITO AND FLY.

Comparative Difference Between the Two Pests.

The mosquito has been around for some time and has been getting his work, in according to the old plan which is generally understood. The fly was a little behind hand, but he, too, has come, and an additional interest has been excited in many quarters. Perhaps it avails nothing to philosophize over the habits of the mosquito and the fly, and yet there is some consolation in knowing that strength and patience are able to survive long enough to permit a fellow traveler to express his mind about them. It is so much more comfortable to live beyond fly time, and have hopes of a better by and by, than it is to be chewed up all at once by wild beasts or tramped upon by even a sacred white elephant that, in the calm of one's own survival reflection, is very sweet. And a good opportunity is afforded for comment and criticism just as one passes from the grip of a mosquito into the presence of a persistent fly.

People complain about the mosquito, and will shun summer resorts as a pestilence if there is the slightest suspicion that this insect is to be among the visitors; but, after all, the mosquito has points of character which are on a par with some of the highest human excellences. He knows when he has got enough! Right here is a world-wide lesson to races of men who weigh themselves down with unnecessary cares, and die, in many cases, in lunatic asylums because they are not wise enough to let go when they have got all they are entitled to. It may be natural to fret over a mosquito, but when his remarkable sense of self-sufficiency is considered he ought to have credit for his virtues, while he is condemned for his imperfections. The worst thing about him is his hesitation regarding position, which always makes it uncertain whether he is where he is or somewhere else; but beyond this, when he has fixed in his own mind the exact point of his destination, he has a definite object in view and can be depended upon to satisfy himself and go.

But the fly is another thing; you cannot satisfy him. He never knows what he wants, but always wants something. There is only one exception to this rule of his life. In the early morning, after a good night's rest, he craves ear; that is the only time when he seems to have a conviction which amounts to a mania. He will go for an ear whenever he sees one, and if he is driven off he never gets so far away but that he can hit the same place within the 1000th part of an inch inside of four seconds, and every time he quits an ear on compulsion he makes it a point to gain time in arriving back. And the cunning cuss has shrewdness enough to travel alone on these sunrise excursions. He doesn't want any debating society along with him; no committee on resolutions; no words wanted—but it is himself, one fly in possession of the whole situation, organized and equipped for a single parade ground. He seems to know that if he traveled in company there would be defensive works established on every ear, and in the crowd of assailants he might lose his precious life; but going alone he has a hundred chances to one against the ear and all the powers that can be rallied to defend it.

There may be a difference of opinion on this subject, but the best authorities, such as George Wright on "The Fly," and others, unite in saying that the mosquito has moral qualities which are worth studying, while the fly possesses scarcely any points worthy of a high moral lesson.—Hartford Courant.

Went After His Hat.

"One day of last week," said an Albany shoe dealer, "when I was alone in my store, a well-dressed stranger entered. He wore a white 'dicer' (as the boys call it), which he laid carefully upon a counter near the door. Then he asked me for a pair of my very best custom-made lace shoes. A pair was soon placed at his disposal. Seating himself, he tried on the right shoe. 'This is a splendid fit,' he said, 'but my feet are each of a different size. Let me see if the left one sets as well.' The left shoe was pulled on his foot, and he stood up and gazed proudly down at his extremities. 'Those are about right,' he said, 'but suppose you give me a pair a leetle smaller. There is no need of a man making his feet look larger than necessary.' I mounted the steps after another pair, when I heard a noise in the front of the store and looked up in time to see a small boy making away with the stranger's hat. 'Look, your hat!' I shouted; 'after him quick.' The stranger seemed paralyzed for a moment, but then galloped out of the store in pursuit.

That's all," said the shoe dealer, finally. "The new shoes went out with the man, and I have seen neither since. When he tried on the shoes he stamped his feet very naturally, and I suppose that was a signal for his confederate."

Collecting Fares.

I have discovered a new and thriving industry which I should like to check. We all know that, according to mistresses, servants are difficult to keep; but it seems that they are not at all difficult to interview. You advertise, your promising candidate turns up, has excellent references, a little way out in the country, to be sure, but the lady will be in town the next day, and glad to see you. All is arranged, but on parting the poor girl represents that she has to pay for her railway ticket; hopes you will not mind giving her the amount; as, not having had her wages yet, she is rather short of cash. You give her the railway fare and off she goes to another house, in answer to another advertisement, and gets another fare. Needless to say she is no servant at all, comes from no place, and is seeking none—is a common swindler, in fact. I am told this little game is being extensively played in London, just now.—Lond'n Truth.

THE BOY OUTDONE.

His Little Sister Pays Him Off In His Own Coin.

The Deep Humiliation of a Boy Who Had Terrorized Everybody—Could Not Stand So Much Questioning.

[Detroit Free Press.]

Young Mulkittle and his little sister sat in the yard. The boy had put on a pair of suspenders which old Ike had prepared for him, and as he sat on the ground, making a wagon of a cigar-box, he wore an expression of profound mechanical insight.

"Did oo see zat Zune bug?" asked the little girl.

"No, honey," he replied.

"Did oo wanter see zat Zune bug?"

"No, chile," whittling away with absorbing interest.

"Tood oo tetch zat Zune bug?"

"Hush, little girl, you make me tired."

"Make oo tired?"

"Yes."

"An' will oo lie down an' rest?"

"Don't bother me. You break me all up."

"Break oo up?"

"Hush!"

Old African Ike peeped from behind a rose bush and chuckled, while the Rev. Mr. Mulkittle, who sat near the window, could not restrain a broad smile, remembering how the boy's questions had terrorized every one with whom he had come in contact.

"What does oo want me to doe way for?" asked the little girl.

"Cause you ask too many questions. Little girls 'bout your size oughter be seen an' not heard.

"Hey?"

"I say you oughter be seen an' not heard!"

"Ought oo, too?"

"If you don't hush, an' let me alone, you shan't play with my wagon when I get it done."

For a time she sat in silence, watching the golden butterflies and instinctively dodging the buzzing bumble-bee. She clapped her hands and cried in delight as a wren lighted on a bush, and then, turning to her brother, she exclaimed:—

"Look at zat on oo sleeve!"

The boy brushed off a caterpillar and made no reply.

"What was zat?" she asked.

"Nothin' but a caterpillar."

"What the cats sleep on?"

"No."

"Why?"

"Good gracious, I wish you'd hush. Such chillun is enough to drive anybody crazy,"

"Run oo crazy?"

"Go away now. I never did see anybody ask such foolish questions."

The little girl lapsed into silence, but after a while she said, pointing to a toad:—

"That ole fawg will hop on oo."

"Yes, an' I'll cut him with my knife."

"An' will it hurt 'im?"

"Yes, it will."

"An' make 'im ewy?"

"Uh, huh."

"An' will oo be sowy?"

"Great goodness! I can't stay here," and gathering up his material, he crossed the yard and sat down by the fence. Pretty soon she toddled after him, stopped, and rubbing her hands, said:—

"Boo!"

"Go way, you are a bad girl."

"Oo's er girl, too."

This was more than he could stand. Nothing more than such an accusation, awakens disgust in the mind of a boy. Springing up, and throwing the unfinished wagon against the fence, he exclaimed: "I won't stay where such a bad girl is."

"Hole on dar," said old Ike, emerging from the shrubbery. "Hole on an' lissen ter whut dat sweet mouf's got ter say. Oh, yas, gittin' paid off in yer own sort o' money, is yer? Ur, he, he! Knowed when I seed yer runnin' folks ravin' 'stracted dat it woul' come home ter yer, haw haw! Gin er hunnered dollars ef yer ole grammudder, whut yer almos' sot crazy, coul' er seed dat 'formance."

Mr. Mulkittle leaned on the window-casing, and laughed, and the boy, with a keen sense of his humiliation, went out to the stable and climbed up into the loft.

The Last One on the Sacred Elephant.

Two young ladies were gazing at the white elephant as it stood enthroned in all its sacred splendor, and surrounded by the mystic emblems of its holy character, and the adoring priests who were kneeling devoutly on every side.

"How curious," remarked one, "that any race of people should be so deluded as to worship an elephant."

"It is, indeed," replied the other, sadly; "when I look upon this worshiping throng of ignorant, superstitious creatures, and realize how earnest and sincere they are, I cannot but feel that there should be no rest until the missionary message is borne to the last one of these benighted heathen."

"True," asserted the first speaker, "it is a grand and solemn duty—"

Just at this juncture the animal flicked its tail and struck one of the Buddhist priests in the mouth.

"Howly Moses!" he exclaimed, interrupting his devotions, "ye hathen baste—" and then the young ladies strolled on to the monkeys' cage.

It is curious, says an exchange, how few people know the benefit of fruit at breakfast time. A saucer of berries, an orange or banana, pear or apple at six in the morning, will make the sky look brighter and fill the world with sunshine even on cloudy days, and yet many people never think of eating fruit in the morning.

THE GUNSIGHT MINE.

An Imaginary Discovery. — The Theory of The Finding.

The disposition of the human mind to accept the marvelous without question has perhaps never been more singularly illustrated than in the history of the Gunsight mine, and the many and persistent searches made for it. The story of its discovery is that during the march of the Death Valley emigrants across that valley in 1849, one of the party while searching for water discovered a ledge in which native silver was present in great quantities, and that breaking from it a large piece of this native metal he used the same in the construction of a sight for his gun; and thus what was then stated to be a ledge, was called, and for these years has been known—though at the present time it is regarded as a myth—the Gunsight mine.

The story of this discovery, linked as it was with the desperate experiences o those emigrants, became widely known, and at once awakened an intense interest in the various mining districts of the Coast, and many expeditions were fitted out at various points, destined for this new Ophir. The story of the perishing emigrants, fearful as it was in distress and even death, seemed to cast a glamour over the story of the mine, and whetted the inclination of miners to penetrate the then unknown and reputed deadly wastes the region in which the mine was said to exist. The original party of emigrants had divided before entering the valley, and formed two trains—one under the leadership of Bennett, and the other under that of J. W. Brier. The Bennett party chose the southern exit from the valley, while Brier, judging the north to be a more easy direction of escape, became bewildered in the wastes of sand that constitute the northern end of Death Valley and in the mountain ranges, bare and heated, that separate it from Panamint, at last, as by a miracle, to escape, through what is now known as Townsend's pass, out into the more friendly though still desperate country that constitutes Panamint Valley and its surroundings.

It was one of the Brier party who made the reputed discovery. His name, so far as we know, was never stated; or if so it has long since ceased to be connected with the mine. That there was a find of native silver of sufficient size to be made into a gunsight has never been questioned. That the discovery was made of a ledge of that metal is definitely settled in the negative. No such ledge was ever found.

After many searches had been made unner the guidance of persons who were of the Brier party, and with diagrams, written directions and maps of the country, it was finally settled that the find was made among the boulders of the great "wash" which stretches from the northwest side or corner of the valley, and reaching the neighborhood of Emigrant Springs; and the great plateau which lies between Death Valley and Wild Rose Cañon down into the heart of Death Valley itself—or to be more correct geographically, into what at this time is known as Mesquite valley. That a correct understanding may be had of this "wash," and how washes here are formed we describe the processes, as follows: This region, wild, wierd and fearful in its features, is the product of earthquake, volcanic shock, and the fury of atmospheric storm. The features of the valley have been described in these columns and need no further outlines. The atmospheric disturbances have at times been of immeasurable force and of recent date, for the evidences of the terrific action have in many places accumulated within the memory of men now living—in fact, have been witnessed by them. Ages have elapsed since the volcanoes were active, and the earthquake has lain quiet in its lair for years. The atmospheric disturbances that so mar and break up the face of the country are the summer waterspouts which gather in those burning skies, and accumulate until they seem a floating ocean, and then break, projecting with irresistible force against some mountain side, rifting its massive formations into shreds and bearing on the breast of its mighty current thousands, yes, millions of tons of earth and rock down into the level of the valley. The track of these waterspouts are visible on every hand, deep, wide excavations, piled with boulders and debris torn from the mountain sides and extending for miles. We have seen them here hundreds of feet deep, in appearance the bed of some extinct river. Thus informed, we will understand more clearly the theory of the Gunsight and what after years of investigation is received as the exact statement of the discovery. The Panamint mountains which are but a continuation northward of the Telescopes separate Panamint and Death valleys. In the neighborhood of Townsend's Pass, which leads from one valley to the other, a long sere ridge strikes out to the east and slopes gradually towards Death Valley until it terminates at the point now marked as the last camp of the perishing emigrants. It forms a portion of the southern boundary of the valley. To the north of this ridge extends a lofty plateau of sage lands covering many thousands of acres. In this ridge are situated several mines or ledges of silver-bearing ores; notable among which is that series situated in the neighborhood of Emigrant Springs, spoken of before, and on the edge of this plateau, but inclined to the slope which tends towards Death Valley. The ridge, though at one time continuous and unbroken, is now cut in two, and a deep pass extends from the valley up into this plateau region—as perfect a mountain pass as can be described The walls of this pass are of soft and yielding materials, not unlike that which in some of the mining regions of Nevada and Sierra counties constitute the grand deposits worked by the hydraulic process. Beyond question this pass was created by a tremendous water spout, which, breaking upon this ridge to the southward and along its summit, tore out its path and made a clear outlet. If any one should doubt this theory of its creation, he need but gather a handful of earth from the walls of the pass, and then another handfuf miles down the "wash" which extends into the heart of the valley, and his comparison cannot fail to convince him of his error.

One of the principal ledges of the series above referred to, and, if we mistake not, now known as the Emigrant, was situated in the track of the waterspout, and portions of it torn from its place were carried down to rest at last a portion of the debris which makes up the great "wash." This ledge bears in places native silver of sufficient size to furnish material for a gunsight.

1. The native silver found was taken from a boulder lying in the "wash" leading from the Emigrant mine into Death Valley—admitted.
2. The presence of native silver in the Emigrant mine.
3. Evidences of the creation of the pass by water spouts.
4. Evidences of the breaking up of the Emigrant ledge by waterspouts, and the presence in the wash of boulders identical in character with that found in the ledge.
5. The inability of all persons, after searches consuming years and made with unparalleled care, to disclose the existence of any ledge indicated by the early reports, leads us almost irresistibly to the conclusion that the native silver found by the early emigrant was taken from a boulder—a piece of "float" from the Emigrant mine.

We have studied these facts upon the ground, and after a careful investigation are satisfied that the theory above advanced is correct, and that the Gunsight mine is as fabulous a creation as the "Fountain of Perpetual Youth," or the "Golden Fleece."

And yet how persistently and patiently was the hunt carried on for years! No toil privation or danger was regarded by those who here, with a faith and patience unequaled, searched year after year along the slopes and in the hearts of the desolate mountains in which it was said the mine was situated. Lives have been devoted and lost in its search and reason overstrained and unseated. To some it became a life passion—the world, home and friends swallowed up in a hope, and that hope ever baffled and deferred. The life and experience of the old Frenchman, Sampá, if we remember his name aright, dying of a broken heart at Lone Pine a few years ago because of his fruitless search, would make a thrilling story of a weary life, bordering ever on despair, and as lonely as the awful deserts in which it was expended, His diary after his death was, most unfortunately, burned; and so his experience has perished with him. For over twenty years was this search carried on, until at last a belief grew apace that no such ledge existed. This belief strengthened until it became as universal and widespread as the former belief in its existence, and all efforts ceased; and the Gunsight mine has passed into history as a myth.

Standing in Death Valley, at the edge of the great "wash" mentioned, is a rock upon which is deeply cut this:

W. B. ROODS, 1849.

It seemed to us a curious thing, and knowing it had a history we patiently searched it out, and found it to be the name of one of the 1849 Brier party emigrants. After his escape he became a cattle raiser in Arizona, but kept always fast in his mind a determination to find the Gunsight. He came back some years after, and made the search, of course with the inevitable result; and shortly afterwards lost his life by drowning in the Colorado river.

The list of those who have at different times participated in its search would fill a volume; and if they were gathered together, make a regiment of men. One of the earliest endeavors was made in 1865, by a party from Petaluma, Sonoma county, where J. W. Brier was at that time residing. Brier himself, impressed by the belief that the mine was a fact, associated with himself two friends, Tuston and Collins, and came to Owens River Valley in the latter part of July, 1865. Finding the Indians hostile, and not deeming it safe for three persons to dare the desert alone, at Fort Independence he secured the co-operation of four others—Ball, Franklin, Le Cruz and Crohn (Chris. Crohn, so well known in this valley in connection with Cerro Gordo. The country at that time was untravelled and but little known. The party, however, after much privation, reached Death Valley. Their supply of water here gave out, and being unable to find more within the valley were compelled to abandon the search and return to Owens River. Subsequent searches have demonstrated that they lost nothing by their speedy return. As late as 1874, a party made up of Dr. Stein, of Oroville, Butte county, one Hall, at present at Darwin in this county, —. Cappelle, and a young man whose name cannot now be recalled, made a search. The young man, having been with the party of emigrants, though at that time a mere lad, acted as guide and successfully piloted the party to the neighborhood where the discovery was said to have been made. He claimed to know all about the discovery, and pointed out where the boulder was found from which the native silver had been taken, or at least its vicinity. O. K. Berry, of Deep Springs, at the present time associated with W. A. Greenly in the ownership and operation of the '78 mine and mill spent an entire year searching from day to day without rest or wait; but of course—no mine. And so the story runs.

There have been other mythical mines in this region; one as remarkable and as widely known as the Gunsight—the Breyfogle. Some persons have connected the Gunsight and the Breyfogle as one and the same. This is a mistake. They were separate imaginations, equal in repute and equally fabulous, fixed in different ranges of mountains; the Breyfogle having for its seat the range to the east of Death Valley and often known as the Funeral Mountains.

The story of the Gunsight has its moral — the energies expended in its search would have made a competence in the world of known things. And yet imagination moves us with greater force than reason.

FRENCH war vessels are stopping English vessels and searching them for articles contraband of war that may be intended for Chinese Ports. The English are very indignant that what they so long claimed as a right should be practiced upon themselves.

BLAINE is received with very great enthusiasm in his his trip through Ohio. Hendricks is met with not less enthusiasm in Tennesssee. Cleveland is keeping very quiet and is leaving the management of the campaign to friends who have had more experience in politics.

THE mails and express are carrying tons of campaign documents all over the country. Nearly all of the stuff is utter trash that no one outside of a lunatic asylum would read. Thousand of dollars are spent in publishing this rubbish, the only gainers being the publishers of the party "organs."

LAST Saturday an unknown man aged about fifty years, was run over and killed by a street car in Los Angeles. A coroner's jury rendered a verdict that deceased came to his death by an accident caused by the criminal negligence of the street-car company in not providing a conductor to prevent crowded cars and platforms and platform steps.

A QUESTION has been raised in reference to the election of Justices of the Peace this fall. Some, that is parties who now hold the offices, claim that the office is a Constitutional one, and therefore the term of office is four years and that, therefore, the official terms of the present incumbents will not expire for two years yet. A pool has been formed to test the question in Court.

ON Tuesday, October 14, ten days hence, the local election will be held in Ohio. Very great interest attaches to this election from the influence the result is expected to have at home and in other States in the Presidential election in November. The Republicans are making great efforts to increase their majority in the present election; and that they are certain of some majority is conceded. The Democrats are not so well organized as their opponents and are not making so energetic a campaign. There is reported to be some dissention within the party that is hindering their efforts. The slight placed upon Mr. Thurman, Mr. Pendleton and other justly famous and trustworthy party leaders has given deep and lasting offense to many able and influential Ohio Democrats.

NOMINATIONS for State Senators and Assemblymen were made in San Francisco last week and most of the nominees are saloon keepers, firemen, laborers, men utterly unfit by habits and education to become law makers. The State at large has an interest in these nominations; the City and County of San Francisco returns one fourth of all the Assemblymen in the State, it is safe to say that several of these nominees scarcely know of the existence of many counties in the State, but beyond all question few of them know the extent, resources, population, productions, character of soil and climate, and consequently the legislative needs of the various counties. Yet these are the men who have power to fix salaries of the county officers, to make road laws, fence and stock laws, and, in a word, laws that affect the interests of the people of whom they know little and care nothing. The most effective remedy for most of our legislative evils will be found in conferring more power upon Boards of Supervisors. They are in a position to know best what the services of local officers are worth and what such services can be had for; they also know better than those San Francisco Saloon keepers what measures will best promote the general good.

Luminous Paint.

Luminous paint is fast coming into quite general use. It will soon be used for painting door casings and the woodwork of hallways, so that persons may be able to readily find their way about the house in the dark. Railway carriages may be made to glow softly within and without. Gate posts might be made to show themselves more readily than now. In time the outside of buildings might be thus made to make themselves luminous during the night by the light which they have stored up by day. Numerous other uses have already been made of this interesting discovery, and others will readily suggest themselves. The uses to which this paint may be put multiply themselves rapidly as we dwell upon the theme, and will be largely utilized as soon as it can be placed on the market at a moderate cost.

Leprosy and Its Dangers.

The following appeared in the Medical Record of August 9th:

Good results may follow evil methods, and whether Dr. O'Donnell be a charlatan and an alarmist or not, he has excited interest in a subject that deserves the attention of the American people. Leprosy is not a disease of which those who are clean and chaste need ever have any fear; but as a large number of American citizens possess neither of these virtues, it is well that they provide against the contingency of elephantiasis græcorum. For there is little doubt that leprosy is contagious just as syphilis is contagious, i. e., through the agency of the secretions and blood. Among licentious people it may spread with rapidity. The influence of heredity is also potent in increasing the number of victims. Lepers reproduce lepers, though fortunately the second generation dies before it can be productive.

The contagion of leprosy, according to Dr. George Thiu, lies unquestionably in the bacillus lepræ, first discovered by Hansen. This bacillus resembles very closely that of tuberculosis. Its habitat is the lymph or white blood-corpuscle, which it changes into the leprous cell. It makes of this an irritative body, producing the peculiar exudations and low grade inflammatory conditions characteristic of the disease.

The parasitic theory of leprosy is an interesting one, and, if true, would throw a new light upon methods of prophylaxis and treatment. It is difficult, however, to explain satisfactorily by this theory the facts of hereditary transmission of the disease and especially such a one as is given by Dr. A. W. Saxe. That writer says: The healthy wife of a leper gave birth to a leprous child. Her husband died. The still healthy widow married a healthy man, and gave birth again to a leprous child.

As regards China and leprosy, it is to be borne in mind that, if we are to legislate against the disease, we must not single out China. Leprosy exists also in Mexico, the West Indies, India, Norway, Sweden, New Brunswick, Australia, the Sandwich Islands, Eastern Africa; in fact, on the sea coast in nearly all tropical regions.

In India there are said to be over 100,000 lepers. The number in China is unknown, but is unquestionably great. The Hawaiians, of all people, are most scourged by it, nearly one-tenth of the population being affected.

Four years ago there were between fifty and one hundred lepers in the United States. Whether this number has increased we cannot say. One thing is certain, however, that the disease cannot be spread by the simple exhibition of cases of leprosy before the public. However bad the taste or useless and sensational the object of such a performance, it would be as innocent to public health as the exhibition of a like number of cases of syphilis.

The citizens of New York who have been so worried over the possible introduction of leprosy into their city, should be informed that for years there have been one or more lepers in the city hospitals, one even having served for a time as a nurse in Bellevue hospital.

While leprosy is a disease about which much is unknown, there are certain facts that are tolerably well established. These have been formulated by Dr. A. W. Saxe ("Report on Hawaiian Leprosy") as follows: "(1) Leprosy is not a form of syphilis; (2) it is a specific and well marked disease; (3) there are two varieties—the tubercular and anæsthetic (some add a third, the macular); (4) these varieties may be distinct or associated; (5) it is more common in males than in females; (6) it is hereditary; (7) it is contagious; (8) it is incurable; (9) Europeans are to a certain extent exempt from the disease, probably from greater precautions in avoiding the contagion; (10) the causes of the disease are unknown; finally, leprosy disappears with improved hygienic conditions of a people, cultivation of the soil and absolute isolation of all lepers."

In some cases, we would add, the disease seems to disappear, despite the most favorable conditions for its propagation, as has been noted in the Virgin Islands by Dr. Bonn.

Milk for Typhoid Fever.

Surgeon-General Barnes, about three years ago, heard of an allopathic physician in Virginia who, so it was alleged, never failed to cure typhoid fever. As there were many patients in the United States Army dying with that disease, General Barnes decided to visit this Virginia doctor and learn how he treated his typhoid patients. When he met the old gentleman, General Barnes inquired: "What is the mode of treatment by which you succeed?" "Why," replied the venerable physician, "It's the simplest thing in the world. All you have to do is to get the patient's stomach in good order, and then diet him on buttermilk; that's all. I never lose a patient, if he isn't in a collapsed condition when I get to him." General Barns tells me that he adopted the buttermilk treatment among the soldiers in the army, and has found it most efficacious. It appears that some ten years ago the medical scientists of France and Russia compared notes as to the use of plain sweet milk in the treatment of their typhoid patients, and concurred in the decision that milk is not only a wonderful remedy in typhoid cases, but in the treatment of fevers generally. An eminent medical man, a professor in a New York eclectic college—Dr. Newman—informed your correspondent, a few weeks before he died, about a year ago, that he had found to be substantially true all that is set forth relative to plain sweet milk and buttermilk, and that the latter "acted like a charm" in cases of general debility. "It's a great blessing, this discovery," said he.—Baltimore Day.

REDUCED FARE.—On the arrival of all trains at Independence station, comfortable conveyance and good horses are in attendance to carry passengers to any part of town for fifty cents each.

RICH ORE.—A few men at work at the Kearsarge mine are taking out some rich ore. Twenty sacks brought down to the little mill last Wednesday were filled with ore worth fifty cents per pound. Samples of this ore assayed in San Francisco contained $1,250 per ton. A run of ore, made at the mill some days ago, yielded very large returns.

WATER-MILLS ON THE COMSTOCK.—It is said that the Virginia and Gold Hil Water Company are makinge arrangements by means of which water-mills will be put in operation on the Comstock for the reduction of low-grade ore. With a quantiiy of water to run one mill turned loose here on the lode, other mills might be put up at short distances, all the way down Six Mile Canyon. There would be little loss of water between mills, and the last of the series would be about as well supplied as the first.—Enterprise.

LOST ON THE DESERT.—News was brought to San Barnardino last Monday that Thomas Cover, a prominent reident of Riverside, was lost on the desert. Cover and a man named Russel were prospecting about a week ago in the neighborhood of Dos Palmos. At a point on the desert they seperated agreeing to meet at a place distant eight miles and well known to both. Russel arived safely, and after waiting at the rendezvous until nearly starved out, he started to the railroad station for help. He returned to the place immediately, where he had left a canteen of water and provisions for Cover, should he appear, but to the present time a week since, he has not been seen. the country has been searched by Russel in every direction. A large party left at once by rail to prosecute a thorough search over the desert for him. Cover is one ci the pioneers of Riverside and is quite wealthy.

Letter From Round Valley.

ROUND VALLEY, Sept. 30, 1884.

Mr. Editor:—About the middle of this month Jack Frost visited this section with severity and green stuff generally succumbed to his wintry breath. Considerable corn has been killed, some oats cut down, and even patches of wheat hurt by the withering blizzard. Mr. William Horton, the first and oldest citizen of this valley, has a field which has been planted with corn for twenty years successively. He has harvested nineteen good crops from said field but this year it will be almost a total failure. Other fields of corn have been killed. This has been an unusually short growing season—late spring and early frost in September. However, we should not be discouraged; one failure in twenty years is not a bad showing. On the other side of the Sierras, in some parts, one very short crop out of three is usually expected. Round Valley does not claim any superiority as a corn producing section, wheat being our specialty; still we can furnish you facts in corn culture which prove big yield and rapid growth. Mr. D. Olds one season planted corn in July from the first to the fifth and harvested therefrom thirty-two hundred pounds per acre. We have agricultural resources—natural aduantages in this valley—good soil, mild climate, and abundance of water for irrigation; consequently, with one or two exceptions, we are the happiest people on earth!

Two threshing machines are now thundering early and late in this valley. No sooner do the grain stacks loom up than the threshers level them to the ground. Both machines do good work and are manipulated by efficient crews. In days of yore, when the late John Westerfield and the Hitchcock boys had full sway of threshing in Owens Valley whisky was considered a potent factor in the business. Whenever the old machine was set and fairly started, "West" would quietly retire from the scene of operations, hunt up the grain proprietor and complein of a severe pain in his abdominal region. "Have you any pain-killer?" was the query. "No; but I have a bottle of concentrated bug juice."—whisky. West takes a big swig and prophesies that the stack will turn out splendidly. "You'll have a good crop, Boss. Boss suggests another drink, after which West find a comfortable shade and stretches out for a snooze. Boss trots out to the threshing; by that time Andy Hitchcock, the feeder has run out thirty sacks of grain and steps down for a rest while his brother makes a run. Andy looks wistfully at Boss and declares that the stack contains tons of killing dust of rust or smut—has swallowed fifty pounds of it already. His wry face indicates suffering and Andy is led to the granary and introduced to the bottle, half of which gurgles down his big throat, affording him immidiate relief. The only one of the old time threshermen who still visit us annually is Gus McGovern. We never saw Gus suffering intensely with cramp or colic, still he would frequently give broad hints and, like West and the Hitchcocks, take a square pull at the bottle most any time, and also contend that whisky was as essential to the human machine as lubricating oil to the threshing machine. But for the last two years Gus has been a deacon with the Good Templars, and now he proudly proclaims that for evermore good strong coffee shall be his favorite beverage, and we are glad of it.

RUSTIC.

A CARD.—In the report of Mr. Laird's speech before the Democratic Convention last week, was a sentence concerning an alleged action of the managers of the C. & C. railroad, warning their employees not to attend Democratic priary meetings. As none should be refused a hearing in self defense before the bar of public opinion, it is but just that the following card be given publication.

EDITOR INYO INDEPENDENT;—Dear Sir:—In your issue of the 27th inst. I notice a report of the proceedings of the Democratic Convention held at Independence on Monday the 22nd wherein it is stated by the Hon. Chairman that the managers of the C.&C. R. R. had warned employees not to attend a Democratic Primary under the pain of dismissal. As no such order, or intimation even, has been issued by the managers of this Co. I am very much surprised to hear of Mr. Laird making the assertion, for if made, it is absolutely untrue. I may add that it is the desire and policy of this Co. to treat Republicans and Democrats precisely the same in every way and manner. It has not and does not propose to dictate to its employees or any body else, in matters political as it simply seeks and demands fair play all around in its own behalf, it is anxious and willing to accord the same to others. Yours very truly.

H. M. YERINGTON.

WHY DID HE DO IT?—Hon. J. M. Keeler wants to know why the Bodie Free Press should abuse him for the action of the Inyo county Republican convention in the nomination of an Assemblyman. In the convention Mr. Keeler argued in favor of the right of Mono to make the nomination; no blame can possibly be attached to him for the action taken. Mr. Keeler in a note says: "What is the matter of the Editor of the Bodie Free Press? 'I do not know him.' Osborne and myself were close friends. You know the ground I took in regard to Mono's right to a Representation. What does he want to slur me for? I don't care for his good or bad opinion. I have friends whose honest judgment gives me more credit in my representative career than perhaps I would dare claim, and they know more in a minute than he will ever know. I think republicans should be lenient at least toward each other that we may all pull and work together and accomplish a sure victory.

Yours truly.
J. M. KEELER.

BISHOP CREEK CORRESPONDENCE.

BISHOP CREEK, Oct. 1, 1884.

Editor Independent, Dear Sir:—Times appear to be getting worse in Bishop Creek. The Casey Mining Company suspended operations yesterday.

Our Post Office has moved to the store of Mr. J. H. Bullpit.

James Conroy. Station master at Bishop Station is seriously ill.

James H. Richardson accompanied by Bernard McCluskey started for Fresno via Mammoth City last Saturday afternoon.

George Morrison of Virginia City is here gathering notes for Bancroft's Pacific Coast History of which he is agent.

A. C. Knox agent for Rural Press is also here.

Politics seem to be the topic of the day here.

Wm. A. Irwin Esq. Sup't of the Polita G. M. Co arrived last night from San Francisco.

Cold weather has at last set in and people are putting up their heating stoves.

Round Valley school opens next Monday.

Messrs Munsinger and Phillippay are having a wind mill and tank erected in addition to their Brewery.

Shooting Season commences to day. Now trot out your shootists and have a picnic.

Wind blowing a regular gale to day, is very cold.

Mrs. J. H. Stoutenborough leaves for a visit to San Francisco to night.

The thrashing machines are at present at Round valley at work.

After all our Indian gatherings we have had here, trying to stop this selling of whiskey to Indians, they still continue to get drunk. Our authorities do not seem to take any interest in the matter at all.

E. A. Carouthers returned last evening from Fresno and Quartz Mountain. He says things look kind of lively over there. But every thing is over run.

George Waterson merchant at Benton paid this town a visit yesterday.

Well. I can't think of any thing more to say, so will close with regards,

FALSTAFF JR.

Reply to "Citizen"

In last week's issue of this paper there was given a communication from Bishop Creek, on the killing of an Indian woman near that town. The writer of the article expressed dissatisfaction with the conduct of the officers for not arresting the murderer, and to this the Constable makes reply as follows:

BISHOP CREEK, Sept. 29th, 1884.

MR. EDITOR:- In your issue of Sept. 27th, I see a communication from "Citizen" censuring the Deputy Sheriff and myself for not doing our duty, (as he thinks), as officers; and in reply to indignant "Citizen" I will say that I don't have to consult the District Attorney or the editor of THE INDEPENDENT to know my duties. And as for the Deputy Sheriff, I know him to be a law abiding citizen, and I think he knows his duties about as well as "Citizen" does. Does indignant "Citizen" know that we have no Justice of the Peace here, and does he know the duties of an officer? I think not. Does "Citizen" know that it is necessary for some one to make a complaint and swear out a warrant of arrest before any officer would be justified in arresting the murderer. When I talked with the chiefs about the murder, they said the Indians did not want to punish the murderer, they said she was a witch and were glad she was killed. If Mr. "Citizen" knows who did the killing, let him come to the front and make his complaint, get his warrant, and the Deputy Sheriff or myself, either one will serve it. As for myself, I am ready and willing to serve any and all papers that are placed in my hands; but I don't propose to lay my bondsmen liable for my doing something that the law does not justify me in doing. Mr. "Citizen" wants to know if such a thing would be tolerated in any other town or city. I say yes; for only a short time ago a mahala was killed right in the town of Independence. Why did not "Indignant Citizen" kick up a dust about that? I don't pretend to say because that is the case that it is right; not by any means; for two wrongs never made a right. Now if Mr. "Citizen" has any thing more to say about the Deputy Sheriff or myself, please request him to give his name. Yours respectfully,

GEO. L. DRAKE.

From the foregoing it is very evident that the law of arrest is not generally or clearly understood. Where a felony has been committed it is not necessary to wait for a warrant before making an arrest. A communication from "Lex" shows that the matter is under consideration, and further communications will show how the law applies to such cases, and what are the duties of officers.

BISHOP CREEK, Oct. 1, 1884.

Mr. Editor:—Will you please ascertain frem the books of the Supervisors what the bridge across Owen's River at the Bishop Station on the C. &. C. railroad cost the County of Inyo, and publish the same for the benefit of your patrons. Respectfully,

CITIZEN.

The County books show that the account stands as follows: Total cost of labor, lumber and other materials for the bridge, $1111.24. For making road $334.60, Total for bridge and road, $1445.84. By private subscription there was raised the sum of $480, which taken from the above left a balance of $965.84, and of this amount the Supervisors ordered the payment of $482.92 to the railroad company. The account may be stated in this way, namely: Total cost of bridge and road $1445.84; total amount paid by the county and individuals, $962.92; total amount paid by the railroad company, $482.92.

The Law and the Indian.

EDITOR INYO INDEPENDENT:—Referring to an article in last INDEPENDENT, signed "Citizen," calling attention to the murder of an Indian squaw, and criticising the action or want of action on the part of the officers of the county in that and like affairs, I beg leave to state that it has been decided that there is no law for the arrest or trial of an Indian for the murder of another Indian of same tribe, while there exists a tribal relation. The whole question was most elaborately discussed in the case of State of Nevada vs. Truman, McKenney, Judge; Supreme Court of the State of Nevada. The following is the syllabi of the decision, which was made December 6, 1883, and reported in West Coast Reporter, Vol. 1, page 407: "District Courts have no jurisdiction to try an Indian belonging to a tribe which is recognized and treated as such by the Federal Government, having its chief and tribal laws, for killing another Indian of the same tribe. Neither the general laws of the Territory nor of the State, defining crime and providing for the punishment, were intended to apply to crimes committed by one Indian against another of the same tribe." The same decision was recently made in Oregon, and the rule established in those decisions, being founded upon Federal regulations, is of equal force and operation in this State. In cases of murder by one Indian on another, two questions answered in the affirmative release the slayer from the operation of our criminal laws:

1. Were the Indians members of the same tribe, and subject to the tribal laws?

2. Does there exist a recognized tribal relation and organization?

A SHEEP STATION.

The Primitive and Patriarchal Life of an Australian Shepherd.

Sheep-Raising in the Antipodal Continent—Disposition of the Wool-Clip—Canneries for Preserving the Mutton.

[American Agriculturist.]

Australian shepherds lead a life nearly as patriarchal as a Tartar's. A wild and lonely existence is theirs, and only men of iron physique could undergo it. Two shepherds always chum together, one acting as hut-keeper, while the other is out upon the range. They travel from range to range as the grazing grows poor, and the country is dotted with the rude slab huts they find shelter in. Their fare is of the rudest, consisting of "damper," a sort of bread made of flour and water, baked in the wood embers, mutton and tea. Of late years the luxury of canned meats occasionally falls to their share. Tobacco is their only luxury, and a battle with the fleas which infest their huts, their only rest.

The Australian wool grower's greatest enemies are the catarrh, the scab, the foot rot, which is caused by marshy grazing grounds, bad servants who neglect the flocks, and the wild dogs. The latter were once a formidable foe indeed, but their destructive hordes have been greatly decimated by the hunters, who shot them by thousands to obtain the bounty offered for their scalps. These dogs will hunt a flock of sheep as systematically as men conduct a drive of deer. They surround and close in on them, reading and devouring all in their path. Great flocks are often stampeded by them, when the sheep run until they drop exhausted, or struggle into some stream and are drowned.

The shepherd dog is as sagacious and true a friend to his woolly charges as the wild dog is a relentless foe. Sheep-raising has produced in Australia a peculiar breed of dogs, different in many appearances from the European shepherd dog, but akin to it in all qualities. These dogs seem to know all the sheep in a flock. They will hunt for stragglers miles away from the hut, and either drive them in or watch them, if they happen to be exhausted, until they gather sufficient strength to walk. It is a common thing in traversing the grazing country to come upon one of these noble brutes en guard over a strayed or broken down sheep, and woe betide the stranger who attempts to lay hands on his helpless protege.

In addition to the wool crop, the Australians derive a huge revenue from the boiling down of sheep. Boiling down was originally resorted to on the occasion of a panic forty years ago, when sheep could not be sold in the local market. Then the surplus of the herds was reduced to tallow, and a market for that commodity opened in England. Some years after, huge canneries for the preservation of the mutton were started with satisfactory results. Now the sheep grower makes capital out of the flesh and fat of his flocks, as well as their wool.

Another extensive trade is the preparation by salting and smoking of mutton hams, which are used for ship's food throughout the Indian seas.

A sheep station is the center or headquarters of a range. Here the proprietor lives, surrounded by his overseers and storekeepers. In addition to the proprietor's and his subordinates' houses, the station consists of a few shops, some barracks for the shepherds, and paddocks covering hundreds of acres, all fenced and posted as stoutly as can be. The largest buildings at a station are the shearing and sorting sheds, and all the important stations now appear to have huge steam presses for baling the wool. At the smaller stations the hand-press is used. Small sheep owners drive their herds into the large stations and there sell the wool.

This disposition of the wool-clip, has given existence to a character in the shape of the buyer of wool, who is known among the small growers as the "wool-worm." The wool-worm will buy a clip while it is yet on the flock, and the improvident sheepmen take advantage of this and pay usurious interest for the accommodation. These wool buyers have the country districted. One never trenches on the other's ground, and one and all are said to be willing to advance money on the clips several years ahead. The result is that many flocks are under perpetual mortgages, and in the end fall into the hands of the usurers, who sell them at once, for they find more profit in buying wool than in raising it.

As the shearing season comes around the flocks are driven to the stations where they belong. Watering carts keep the dust laid, as day after day the woolly legions come marching into the paddocks. If the weather is rainy, they are sheltered in the large "sweating sheds," into which from 2,000 to 3,000 sheep can be packed at a time. When the campaign is ready to open the "yarders" are mustered to duty, which is to keep the shearers supplied with subjects. Then the animals pour into the shearing sheds in a steady stream. They are kept in pens there until sheared, and then turned loose to be marked and penned out. they are driven out on the ranges again.

The fleece having been clipped, is passed to the wool tables, where it is sorted and "skirted," or cleaned of the rough dirt which adheres to it. Australian wool is divided into first, second, and third qualities, before it goes to the press.

The laborers at the station work day and night in shearing time. From the proprietor down, they enjoy only the briefest rest. The wool having been pressed, the bales are weighed and marked with the distinguishing marks of the station. The transportation to market, or the nearest railroad station, takes place in huge platform wagons, drawn by six or eight horses or oxen. These wagons carry from thirty to forty bales to a load.

The station fills up with peddlers of all sorts of wares, not forgetting the "sly grogeman," who is the master of a barroom on wheels. Between these and the regular shop-keepers, most of the money made by the laborers at the shearing, is gotten rid of before they leave.

A man calls his dog "Expectorate," because it is a spaniel.

IF.

If you your lips
Would keep from slips,
Five things, observe with care:
Of whom you speak,
With whom you speak,
And how, and when, and where.

If you your ears
Would save from jeers,
These things keep meekly hid:
Myself, and I,
Me, mine, and my,
And how I do or did.

Changing of the Dials.

Now that the question of standard time seems definitely settled, despite the defection of Louisville, the attention of railroad men and scientists, the two classes most concerned in the above reform, is turned toward the question of dial reform. Instead of our two divisions of twelve hours apiece, which now make up the day and night of twenty-four hours, the advisability of numbering the hours consecutively from one to twenty-four is being discussed. Already in many jewelers' windows may be seen watch-faces provided with a double ring of figures, the inner one of which shows the figures 13 to 24. Though to some extent this meets the primary objection to the change of hours, namely, that the twelve-hour watch movements would be rendered useless, it does not altogether work simply and satisfactorily. Another system has been invented by Dr. Whitney, a Philadelphia enthusiast. This needs a complete distribution of the figures on the dial, and in this particular only is bettered by the form above described, which can be adapted to any existing watch-face. According to the new method the figures from 1 to 24 are arranged as it were upon an endless band which crosses on itself so that the figures 6 and 18 are in contact. Thus it will be seen that there is an outer rim with the figures 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, and an inner rim with the figures 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12. The 13 of the inner rim is under the 1 of the outer rim, and the other numbers follow in the order given. Starting our twenty-four hours at midnight, one can use up half the outer rim until the morning hour of the work-day world is reached. At six o'clock one can shift to the inner rim and use this throughout the day until the approach of dusk warns us that we have changed again on the outer rim, which is accordingly used until midnight. It may be remarked that the day would have to begin at midnight instead of, in astronomical fashion, at midday. Were this not the case it would be one day of the month in the morning and the next day in the afternoon.

This plan of arranging the dial has secured the warm commendation of Sanford Fleming, who was one of the chief movers in the introduction of the standard time system. There seems but little doubt that at the international convention shortly to be held the subject will receive full discussion, and it is hoped that the railroad companies will make the first move by adopting it on their time-tables, thus doing away with the necessity of the awkward and puzzling "A. M." and "P. M." It has been suggested by the inventor of the above described dial that to satisfy the conservative-minded ones who would still cling to the system of their forefathers and would affect to be puzzled by the new notation, the following plan should be adopted. A foot-note might be printed at the bottom of each page of the time-table: Note: For P. M. hours, read 12 less. Thus a time-table would read: "Trains arrive: From Pittsburg, 6:10, 11:20, 19:30, and 22:20 daily. From Washington and Baltimore: 6:30, 6:40, 13-20, 15:40, 15:50, 17:30, 21:20, 22,20 and 22:35 (Read 12 less for P. M. hours). —N. Y. Tribune.

Great Strength of the Ancients.

Physical superiority of the ante-Alexandrian Greeks to the hardiest and most robust nations of modern times, is perhaps best illustrated by the military statistics of Xenophon. According to the author of the "Anabasis," the complete accoutrements of the Spartan soldier, in what we would call heavy marching order, weighed seventy-five pounds, exclusive of the camp, mining, and bridge-building tools, and the rations of bread and dried fruit which were issued in weekly installments and increased the burden of the infantry soldier to ninety, ninety-five, or even to a fully hundred pounds. This load was often carried at the rate of four miles an hour for twelve hours per diem, day after day; and only in the burning deserts of southern Syria the commander of the Grecian auxiliaries thought it prudent to shorten the usual length of a day's march.

DR. WHITMAN'S RIDE.

How Oregon Was Snatched from the Hudson Bay Company.

Galloping for "Washington and Webster"—A Terrible Trip Across the Plains in Midwinter—The Return Caravan.

[Chicago Inter-Ocean.]

In 1836 Dr. Marcus Whitman and his partner, Spaulding, with their wives, went to Oregon under the auspices of the American Board. It was a bridal tour, begun in May and ended at the gates of Fort Walla Walla in September. A curious feature of the trip was an old wagon, known in history as "Whitman's wagon." He was determined to get it through to demonstrate the feasibility of emigration. The Hudson Bay Company discouraged every roll of its old wheels, and threw every obstacle in the way. It was dismembered, dragged by pieces, ingloriously dwindled to the dimensions of a cart, but, through the indomitable will of its owner, it kept rolling toward the Pacific.

Prior to 1842, the United States and England were in joint occupation of the Oregon region.

It was generally understood that the country would be English or American, according to the tide of emigration. One day in October, 1842, Dr. Whitman was called on a professional errand to Fort Walla Walla, twenty-five miles from his home. It was a trading post of the Hudson Bay Company, and was quite jubilant just at this time over the annual line of goods. Tables were spread for the feast, at which the doctor found himself a solitary American. The festivities were at flood tide, when an express courier rushed into the fort and shouted that an English colony of 140 persons was on its way up the Columbia. In the excitement of the moment a young Englishman jumped to his feet and exclaimed, "Hurrah for Oregon! America is too late! we have got the country!" The doctor excused himself at the earliest possible moment, and in two hours pulled up his foam-flecked pony at his cabin door, made known the English plot before dismounting, and his determination to set out for Washington and return the next summer with a caravan of emigrants. None could dissuade him; he must go; the Webster-Ashburton treaty was pending; the Oregon question must be settled before congress adjourned on the 4th of March; Oregon must be saved!

CROSSING THE CONTINENT.

In less than twenty-four hours he was in the saddle, galloping for "Washington and Webster. Home and wife behind him, winter and 4,000 miles before him! With Amos L. Lovejoy and a guide, he bounded over the trail, through Fort Hall, whose jealous commandant would have been glad to have detained him had he not shown a "pass" from Lewis Cass, secretary of war. The mountains are passed, but winter is setting in, and has already frozen the rivers to rapid current. Impassable! Not to the doctor and his errand of life or death to Oregon! He rides his horse to the edge, and then horse and rider are pushed into the angry current; out of sight; there they are floating far down to the other side: a jump to the ice; good fire and dry clothes again. Lost in the snow; wandering; freezing; dying; almost buried; hope entirely gone; every avenue of escape cut off—saved by a mule's ear! His Mexican rider noticed some peculiar twitchings and movements of the auricular appendages, as if their owner was cogitating a scheme. In a little while the animal, left to himself, led them to the slumbering embers of their morning fire.

Precious time lost! Seven days to Fort Wintee for another guide; an extra ride for Whitman! To avoid hostile Indians he makes a sharp deflection to the south at Fort Hall, to go by Salt Lake, and thence to Bent's fort on the Arkansas, and follow up the Santa Fe trail. Here he is at a branch of the Arkansas; no material for fire only on the other side; thin ice; rapid current; Whitman lays flat on his back—"wriggles" himself across—secures wood and pushes it back over the thin ice.

Bent's fort! half way! three months in the saddle! his companion broken down and left; new outfit. After resting four days the wiry doctor takes the spur again, and scatters rumors of an immense emigration to Oregon! "Meet us at Westport on the Missouri next June!" "Good wagon road!" As he came flying up the trail he distributed circulars, setting out the advantages and resources of the wonderful El Dorado. "Next June we will meet you!" In such enthusiasm he arrived in St. Louis; though nipped in his nose, toes, hands and face, he could talk of but one business—the fate of Oregon: "Westport next June!" "Is the country passable?" "Passable" we can imagine him replying "Look at me; I have come through in the dead of winter!" One look would have forever impressed upon memory; buffalo overcoat and head; buckskin breeches; fur undergarments and vest; fur leggings; boot moccasins; face scarred with the bitter frosts; "meet us in June," and he is off for Washington, where he arrives March 3d, the last day of the session, and just five months from the day when he spurred down the valley from Fort Walla Walla.

BACK TO OREGON.

But what of the treaty? It had been signed and proclaimed as the law of the land two months before he had set out, and ratified while he was lost in the mountains. Four thousand miles and Oregon left out. Will this weather-beaten, frost-bitten man have galloped to Washington for nothing? Not he. He rides through Washington about as he had done over the mountains and up the southern trail; "early in June you will meet me." From department to department, to the White House, everywhere, rumors are flying fast of a great Oregon emigration. President and secretaries become infected with his enthusiasm. The British premier proposed to hold Oregon for English emigrants. If Marcus Whitman could get his emigrants there, Daniel Webster proposed likewise to stand by them.

No "meet" for a chase was ever called which had in it such magnetic charm as that June "meet" on the banks of the Missouri. Whitman was there, overseeing, organizing, electrifying. People were gathering from the north, east, and south. One man came from Texas, having received one of Whitman's flying circulars at home. The last wagon was packed and the canvas stretched over the great hoops. What a proud monument it must have been for the doctor to have seen 200 wagons wheel into line, with 875 emigrants and 1,300 cattle headed for the distant "half mythical" Oregon.

No train ever had more elements of strength, none a better commander. The Government deputized Capt. John C. Fremont, with several companies, as an escort. The vigorous doctor preceded his escort by forty-nine days! After his gallant ride of 4,000 miles he felt safe enough with his company, though more than half of them were women and children.

* * * * * *

Again, the sounds of horse-hoofs are breaking upon the ear of an affectionate and solicitous wife, and Marcus Whitman is riding from the shadows of the Cascade Mountains and is soon in her arms—three months from the Missouri and eleven from the day when he took stirrup for "Washington and Webster"—and Oregon. "There followed him into that splendid valley in little companies, and in long, weary file, jaded and battered, and mended after mountain style, 200 emigrant wagons. They emptied their families here and there, the women and children; and scattered all about were cattle and dogs, while lank backwoodsmen, with the inevitable rifle, lounged and strolled. And they continued to arrive even after the light snows of the country had come. It was the army of occupation for Oregon."

The question was settled; Oregon was saved, and in three years made the subject of a satisfactory treaty. But alas! for her saviour and his noble wife! Nov. 29 1847—the saddest page of Oregon's history—and about a year after the treaty, they were massacred by the Indians.

Does Prohibition Fail?

So many newspapers and public speakers insist; and they make the claim, while loudly, blusteringly claiming to desire to have intemperance, and the traffic without which there can be no alcholic drunkenness, suppressed. They affirm that license, at any rate, "high license," is more affective in stopping rum-selling, and so rum-drinking, than prohibition.

It is plain from the efforts being made, and the money spent, by the rum-makers and dealers, to secure the perpetuation of their murderous work, that they do not exert or favor any influence to suppress it. Certainly they know whether license hurts their traffic most, and if it does they will surely be found favoring prohibition, as under it more rum is sold. But are they doing this? No. What poor benighted fellows they are as to their best interest. When they find they cannot succeed in securing "free rum" they next go for license, and howl in painful apprehension against prohibition. That is undesirable. Then they think license better for their traffic than prohibition, and so, undeniably, sensible, true hearted temperance people ought to think and act.

Now these facts are a proof—aside from the statistics of States and more limited localities, where, by prohibitory State statutes, or prohibitory action of the people under "local option" laws, the liquor traffic is prohibited—that prohibition does not fail.

But what do these people mean when they say prohibition fails, and therefore ought not to be enacted? Answer. Clearly just this and no more, that a few people clandestinely, secretly traffic in liquor, and so men get it and drink it in spite of prohibition. This is true, doubtless, and will be, so long as human nature in the rum-dealer is wicked, and unscrupulously devilish in its reaching after gain, and so long as in the rum-drinker it is weak.

But the proof of failure in the law—is just as potent against every law that protects the lives, property, virtue, or any other sacred interest of the community, and if it is valid to arrest or reverse prohibition legislation, then we ought to repeal all laws, and enact the license of theft, robbery, defalcation, adulteration of food, swindling of all the various kinds, seduction, adultery, prostitution, assault and battery, murder, and the whole interminable lists of crimes which prohibitory laws fail to stop. These ought to be licensed as the sure way to stop them. The mere statement of this absurd conclusion, which is the sole natural deduction from the claim founded on the facts about liquor prohibition, is enough to refute the claim, that prohibition so fails as that it ought to be superseded by license.—Stl.

Do It Well.

Whatever you do, do it well. A job slighted, because it is apparently unimportant, leads to habitual neglect, so that men degenerate into bad workmen.

"There is a good rough job," said a foreman in our hearing, recently, and he meant that it was a piece of work not elegant in itself, but strongly made and well put together.

Training the hand and eye to do work well leads individuals to form correct habits in other respects, and a good workman is, in most cases, a good citizen. No one need hope to rise above his present situation who suffers small things to pass by unimproved, or who neglects, metaphorically speaking, to pick up a cent because it is not a dollar.

Some of the wisest law-makers, the best statesmen, and the most gifted artists, the most merciful judges, the most ingenious mechanics, rose from the great mass.

RUFUS HATCH AND HIS BRIDE.

How the Music-Loving Financier Was Captured in a City Church.

Rufus Hatch, better known among the boys as "Uncle Rufe," resides in a handsome brown-stone mansion at 42 Park Avenue. Four small olive branches besides his handsome and accomplished wife grace his fireside. If Uncle Rufus should lose all of the large fortune he now possesses, he would not mind it in the least provided his pretty wife was still left to him. Toward her he evinces the most tender devotion. It is now about seven years since Mr. Hatch became acquainted with the lady who is now his wife.

Uncle Rufus is a passionate lover of music. He spent hundreds of thousands of dollars on music, musical instruments and artists. In every corner of his spacious mansion are to be found traces of his love for music, in instruments of various kinds, from harmonicas up to the concert grand piano. Until very recently Mr. Hatch had musicales at his house, which were conducted on the grandest scale imaginable. Ofttimes as many as fifteen opera singers, male and female, would be hired for the occasion at fabulous prices. His emotion can be easily imagined when, one evening, on entering Grace Church, he heard a fresh young voice caroling forth holy hymns in tones of alluring symphony. The body of the church was deserted. The voice came from the choir. He knelt down and listened, entranced by the sweet music. It was accompanied sometimes by the sonorous tones of the handsome church organ. From his long experience with music, Uncle Rufus felt sure that it was a master hand that touched the keys. He remained there for fully an hour listening to the music.

Then he heard footsteps coming slowly down the stairs. He looked around and saw Dr. Ewer, the pastor of the church, with whom he was well acquainted, coming down the stairs from the organ loft accompanied by a handsome young lady. With her he fell deeply in love. Her exquisite singing and playing had touched a responsive chord in his heart. Hastening towards the couple, Uncle Rufus greeted Dr. Ewer warmly. Uncle Rufus was quickly introduced to the young lady. Her name was Miss Nellie Gray. She was a member of an old Knickerbocker family. Her father was Commodore Gray, admiral of the Pacific Mail Steamship line. At one time he had been connected in business with Mr. Hatch. From the moment the latter first met the old commodore's rosebud of a daughter he was violently in love with her. He called on her at her home, and finally with the consent of herself and parents he had the inexpressible delight of calling her his own. They were married in Grace Church, the scene of their first meeting, by Dr. Ewer.—New York Journal.

Colonel Sketchly's Ostriches.

The latest reports from the experimental ostrich farm in California are favorable to the success of the enterprise. A recent visitor to the farm writes: "These immense birds are kept in yards or inclosures, one male and two females occupying a place together. A common board fence, higher than the ordinary, surrounds each corral and divides them. There is a space or open lane between the pens—a driveway for teams and to carry food to the birds. They eat a wagon-load of shells in one day, besides a large amount of coarse food, vegetables, alfalfa or clover-grass, etc. The cost of each is $1,000, and their weight is from 300 to 400 pounds. They lay 75 eggs each year, each egg valued at $100. Their feathers are plucked twice a year, they are on the tail and wings of the birds, the body being nearly bare. Each plucking averages $300. The eggs weigh two and one-half pounds. The male is black, the tail and wing feathers being white, and the female a grayish white. It requires four strong men to hold one of these pets while plucking their plumes. It seems a cruel process, and no wonder the birds resist so hard. They are savage and dangerous if attacked, and can only be handled after a sack or stocking leg has been drawn over the head. They drive them into a corner, and slip as quietly as possible behind them to draw the covering rapidly on; some feathers are pulled out easily, others are cut, and one has to understand his business to prevent the bird from bleeding to death. They cannot fly or jump, but can keep pace with the fleetest horses. When the eggs are to be gathered, a Chinaman is called into the arena. The ostrich seems to have taken a fierce dislike to the smile of the heathen Chinee, and is so taken up with his efforts to attack him that men slip in unnoticed and take possession of the eggs. The life of an ostrich extends beyond that of human beings, and averages 100 years. The plumes can be purchased singly by visitors, the price depending upon the length and thickness of them. They have to be afterward cleaned and dyed. No dogs or horses are allowed inside the inclosure, as the birds go wild at the sight of either. The Chinamen carry their food to them."

Rust Protector.

What is claimed to be a valuable rust protector is among the recent German inventions. It consists of ordinary oil paint mixed with ten per cent. of burned magnesia, baryta, or strong tia, as well as mineral oil; this neutralizes the free acid of the paint, and the alkaline reaction protects the iron from rust. As a preventative of iron rusting in the ground, the metal is painted over with a mixture of one hundred parts of rosin, twenty-five parts of gutta percha, fifty parts paraffine, and twenty parts magnesia, besides mineral oil. A temporary paint for the movable portions of machinery contains some twenty or thirty per cent. of magnesia or burnt dolonite, with some vaseline added, to prevent drying.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 11,.....1884.

Published Every Saturday, by
C. MULHOLLAND.

A MAN named James Pascoe was murdered in Grass Valley last Monday night. Pascoe was seventy years of age. He kept a saloon, was supposed to have some money, and lived alone. He slept in a room at the rear of his saloon, and was found lying dead on the floor, stabbed in the breast and with his skull broken. The murderer has not yet been discovered.

A SYNOD, or meeting of Presbyterian ministers, was recently held in Los Angeles, and this leads the Express to grow pathetic over what it calls "the dear old doctrine of election"— a doctrine that conceives of a Universal Father

"Wha, as it pleases best Thysel',
Sends ane to heaven and ten to hell,
A' for thy glory,
An' no' for ony guid or ill
They've dune afore Thee."

There are those who think that no immortal soul was ever created only to be doomed to eternal damnation, but apparently the Express "hopes for better things," as a pious member once said.

Thomas H, Reynolds, the chief-deputy of ex State Secretary Burns, has issued the following card.

FRESNO, October 6, 1884.

The statement of D. M. Burns published in to-day's papers is a tissue of falsehoods. Burns says he was worth $25,000 when he took the office. Why then did he then come to me within a month from taking office to raise $2,900, which I gave him to settle a difficulty in Yolo county and which was never repaid? I ask a suspension of the public verdict until I have an opportunity in court to show that I never took a cent of public money in all my official career in San Francisco, occupying places of trust for many years. I was never charged with being a defaulter, and no friend had ever to raise money to get me out of trouble, and I know that a judicial investigation will exonerate me from all guilt in the matter.

THOS. H. REYNOLDS.

The proposed ammendment to the constitution of the State, providing for the publication of School text books by the State, ought to be adopted by a unaminous vote. It is quite possible that some reasonable objections may be raised against the proposed plan of publishing text books, but any change must be an improvement on the preent wretched system, or want of system, for the schools of the State, so far as text books are concerned, are in a condition of confusion worse confounded.

It is doubtful if any two counties in the State use the same set of text books. Boards of Education in selecting text books seem to aim chiefly at getting something different from all other counties, and it might happen that the most active member of the Board would be the worst qualified citizen in the county to make a selection. If the State should publish the books there is some possibility for having the benefit the selection, which would be a most decided improvement on what we now have. The kind of text books used is o intelligence and experience in making of far less consequence than the ability and diligence of teachers. A young inexperienced girl, or a gawky lout of a boy, who prides himself more on the style of rolling around smoking a cigarette, than on skill as a teacher, will not be very successful in arousing in the children an eager desire for knowledge, no matter what text books are used. With any of the books now in use a capable teacher can impart to pupils in the common schools all that could be taught there, and to prevent the incessant change will lessen the expense to parents, and prevent confusion in the minds of children who are moved from one county to another. The only objections yet heard against the proposed change have come from a few County Superintendents who met in San Francisco, and they are only those ornamental persons that are likely to influence just one vote in each county. The people are heartily tired of the present condition of the text book question, and no doubt the amendment to the Constitution will be adopted by a nearly unanimous vote. The following is the text of the proposed amendment: The Governor, Superintendent of Public Instruction and the Principals of the State Normal Schools shall constitute the State Board of Education, and shall compile, or cause to be compiled, and adopt a uniform series of text-books for use in the common schools throughout the State. The State Board may cause such text-books, when adopted, to be printed and published by the Superintendent of State Printing at the State Printing Office and when so printed and published to be distributed and sold at the cost of printing, publishing and distributing the same. The text-books so adopted shall continue in use not less than four years; and said State Board shall perform such other duties as may be prescriped by law.

Mining in Inyo.

In the mountains on both sides of Owens valley there are hundreds of well known ledges of gold and silver bearing ores that are not worked. Many of these ledges contain what would in other districts be classed as high grade ores. The claims are mostly owned by poor men, and in this fact the cause is found why the mines are not worked. Discoverers of the ledges were mostly men who had gained their mining experience in the placer claims or free gold quartz mines on the western slope of the Sierra. The same methods they had seen used for extracting gold were tried here but as the ores are entirely different failure was a necessary result. Some experiments were made to discover a method that would extract the gold or silver from the ore but for want of sufficient capital these experiments were not carried far enough, and work on the mines was suspended. Many of the mining claims came into possession of parties in San Francisco and else where, men who have money enough to experiment with, but it would appear that each was waiting for the other to make the experiments. In the mean time these parties maintain their titles to the mines by doing the necessary assessment work, so that they may profit by the boom that is sure to follow the introduction of a successful method of working these ores. It will doubtless be found that many localities which at the present time have received a hasty condemnation, and are idle and neglected in consequence of an unfavorable report, will, when a better understanding and knowledge prevails, be opened up and proven of most substantial wealth and value, when their real wealth and methods of working it have been mastered. It is true that a few mines in the county have produced millions of dollars, even with the imperfect means used for the extraction of the metals; but so far in the history of its partial development. it is as if a field which requires the most careful culture should produce a promising crop when no cultivation has been given. It would only be taken as a proof of the unusual richness and productiveness of the ground. So the results in the mining history of this county, instead of being taken as a measure of the returns to be expected from its development, should rather be received as an estimate of its probabilities and a proof of its great advantage, because as a matter of fact the results produced have been generally secured without the use of these things which are most necessary to its real and substantial development.

NEVER before have wheat and other farm products sold so low in this State as at present. At present prices for wheat the farmer has no inducement to raise it, and must change to some other productions if he would succeed. The San Francisco Bulletin says: "There are only two items which the agriculturist produces that now bear a relatively high price. These are wine grapes and meat. Nearly all kinds of meat are relatively dear. The prices in this State are out of all proportion to other farm products. It has been predicted by intelligent observers that there is little prospect that meat will bear a low price again in this country. The great cattle ranches are gradually disappearing. The cattle growing industry is crowded to the rear to frontier States and Territories.

Now if meat is not hereafter to be cheap in this market, nor in any of the markets in the United States, it follows that the production of beef, mutton and pork ought to be a paying business, When the farmer can only get 60 cents a bushel for his wheat, he can not possibly make much money.

Suppose the farmers of California, who will have a large surplus of wheat. barley and oats to sell this year, at very low prices, had concluded to sell no cereals; but had decided to turn this amount into beef, pork and mutton! would they not have been much better off? It would then have been true that they would have produced more meat than could be taken for home consumption. But meat is bringing much more satisfactory prices abroad than cereals. Besides, there is a vast home market for meat; that is, the packers in the United States are ready to take all the beef cattle and hogs that are offered at good prices.

The new era of cattle ranching has hardly dawned in California. The production of meat is below the wants of local consumption. The country is scoured for beef cattle, and even for calves hardly fit for veal. Every fat bullock and calf and every pig is wanted The consumer finds that his meat bills from month to month are very large, and out of proportion to other standard articles,. He is told that beef cattle, hogs and sheep suitable for the market are scarce and command a high price, This scarcity, as was noted, has resulted from a neglect of the cattle-growing industry, because, to a large extent. land has been deemed more valuable for other branches of agriculture.

Cereals are low in California; but meat is high. The farmer who puts his grain into hogs and beef cattle need not watch the foreign grain market with anxiety. The purchaser will very likely come to his door.

In a time of general depression in the price of agricultural products it is special interest to inquire what farm products are likely to pay hereafter. Viticulturists, for the most part, will have no reason to complain this year. The fruit-growers will do reasonably well, although there will be some complaint from that quarter. We have to-day this anomaly in the price of farm products, cheap cereals and dear meat. It is not difficult to trace out the cause of this discrepancy in price. Many a farmer in the Western States has been saved from bankruptcy when corn was only worth from fifteen to twenty cents a bushel, by the expedient of turning it into beef and pork and sending it in that shape to market. This shifting of agicultural ballast may yet be found a good thing for farmers in this State."

PHYLLOXERA.

The following report has just been made by Professor Hilgard.

As a general answer to numerous inquiries concerning the probable efficacy of the phylloxera remedy devised by Mr. J. A. Bauer, of San Francisco (viz: the introduction of finely divided quicksilver into the earth around the stock) regarding which several articles have lately appeared in the public press, the following points, based upon the known and observed habits of the insect, are here given in advance of the experiment, which, it is hoped, will be extensively made during the coming season.

There can be no question as to the efficacy of metallic mercury finely diffused through the soil in killing the phylloxera or any other small insect remaining within its reach for any length of time. Apart from the experience long had in this respect in the means used for the preservation of various articles, insect collections, etc., from the attack of small insect depredators, the direct experiment of Mr. Bauer on earth and roots infested with the phylloxera have been entirely conclusive as to the inability of the latter to live more than a few hours in the atmosphere created in a close space, or in earth, at the ordinary temperature, by finely divided mercury. The conclusion that a soil column of six or eight inches deep impregnated with the mercurial vapor by intermixture with "blue mass," will effectually prevent the passage through it of the slow going insect, is therefore fully justified. Many other substances might be used to act similary in this respect, e. g., gas lime; but none others thus far suggested possess the permanency of the mercurial preparation, and the entire innocuousness toward even the most delicate rootlets, unless perhaps in the case of the direct contact of the globules themselves. On this point certainly Mr. Bauer's inspiration has been a most happy one, and while the introduction of mercury into boreholes made in the stem of the vine has long been suggested and found to be useless, his suggestion is, so far as known, altogether new and certainly original.

Were it feasible to impregnate the entire soil of a vineyard with the mercurial preparation, the phylloxera, being unable to ascend to the surface, would probably in a few generations be compelled to succumb, as the "winged form" could not then perform its functions toward the renewal of the tribal vigor by sexual reproduction, Since, however, so extended a use of even this very dilute insecticide is hardly practicable on the large scale, it remains to be determined to what extent its use immediately around the trunk of the vine, in the manner proposed by Mr. Bauer, will be likely to serve the purpose of repression.

The interposition of obstacles to the passage of the insect along the stock was among the early suggestions of aspirants to the great prize offered by the French government for the discovery of an effectual remedy. We have among the inventions aiming in that direction even a proposition to encase the stock in a plaster jacket of several inches thickness. It will be surmised that the sagacious insect was not long in discovering a convenient path outside of the lump of plaster toward the coveted roots. In the case of Mr. Bauer's plan however, the descending or ascending insect innocently crawls into a well-laid trap, which gives no outward sign even by an obnoxious odor. According to the experience had thus far, it seems quite likely that the unwary travelers would find themselves ensnared before they had any intimation of danger; and as there can be no doubt that the great bulk of the ingress and egress ordinarily takes place along the trunk of the vines after the eggs laid by some wanderer on the leaves or branches has hatched, it can hardly be doubted that a considerable repressive influence would be exerted by Mr. Bauer's remedy even where the phylloxera already exists and that it would also a act as a fairly effectual preventive of infection for many uninfested vineyards.

Its universal efficacy is, however, limited by the fact that (as has been observed in Europe, and quite lately and prominently is this State) not only the winged form of the insect, but even the young larval one, will ascend abundantly to the surface of the ground from shallow outlying rootlets, and will from thence progress slowly but surely over the surface to neighboring vines. Direct proofs of this fact have been had here within the last few weeks, and will be published in connection with other new observations, in a subsequent bulletin.

It follows that when such shallow rootlets are abundant (as they are in some soils), the obstacle or trap placed along the stock may effect the welfare and diffusion of the insect only in a slight degree. It is still true that even in this case, great numbers of the wanderers will perish without reaching the safe harbor of a root, since most of them will try the rout along the stock and will there succumb to the mercurial trap. Still some will be likely to find their way down to the superficial rootlets, as the multitude found its way up from them; and this will be the more surely the case, the more the soil is liable to be summer-cracked, or the coarser its tilth. In close sandy, and in well-tilled soils, on the contrary, the chances of stray insects decending by chance to such rootlets would be exceedingly slight, in case the stock were all protected by the mercurialized earth. How great is the difficulty interposed to the progress of the insect on a sandy surface, can only be appreciated by those who have watched the ludicrous antics it exhibts under such circumstances. The incessant tumblings and backslidings soon exhaust its energies, and show good reason why, notoriously the phylloxera is comparsively harmless in very sandy, and correlatively in very well-tilled soils.

From the foregoing consideration, those interested may readily infer how far in their particular cases the ingenious device invented by Mr. Bauer is likely to prove efficacious; and while still it will undoubtedly do far better to plant resistant stock and graft, those favorably situated, or those who have already planted the non-resistant vine, will do well to take the proposed remedy under careful consideration.

WEDDING AT BISHOP.—Last Tuesday the County Clerk issued a marriage license to a couple at Bishop. The bride and groom are named, respectively, Tu Sin and Wan Suey.

WILL BEGIN.—The Station school, at the Bishop depot, will commence its first term in a short time. The services of Miss Minnie Thomson, of Independence, have been engaged as teacher for the term, six months.

WILL REPEAT.—In obedience to many calls the play "East Lynne" will be repeated at Independence November 10th. Good though the first presentation of the play was, the second will no doubt be much better.

WEDDING CAKE.—The printers were remembered with a generous portion of cake from the wedding at Bishop Creek, a few days ago. A fair correspondent has written a pleasant description of the affair, which it is a pleasure to publish.

LAST CHANCE. — Next Wednesday, October 15th, is the last day when voters can be registered for the coming election. All who are not registered on or before that day will not be permitted to vote on November 4th. Don't lose your chance to help save the country.

MUST BE A QUART.—By Section 9 of the ordinance adopted by the Supervisors, and published in another column, it is not lawful under certain classes of license to sell liquor in less quantity than a quart. The quantity sold must fill a quart measure, or the law will be infringed, and a penalty may be incurred.

THEIR CHOICE.—It would appear that in his own party there is no opposition to the re-election of John P. Jones to the United States Senate. The Reno Gazette says: "Out of 490 votes polled at the Republican primaries in Ormsby county, only 153 indicated any choice for United States Senator, the balance of the tickets having been voted blank. Senator Jones having received all the votes cast, the convention instructed the legislative candidates to vote for the re election of John P. Jones."

APPORTIONMENT. — The Supervisors met this week in special session to fix a tax levy, and placed the rate at three and a quarter per cent. This is distributed among the several funds as follows:

State Funds.....	.45 2-10
Interest and Building	.15
Salary	1.14
School.....	.18 1-10
Bond.....	.45
Hospital.....	.08 7-10
General Expense.....	.65
Contingent.....	.09
General Road.....	.05

IRVING SCHOOL.—The following report is made by the teacher: "The Irving school has been in session one month, and during that time the following pupils have gotten on the Roll of Honor: Agnes Ford, Nettie Ford, Minnie Brockman, Angie Brockman, Hattie Van Eps, Clara Marley, Kate Young, Lulu McLaren, Stella McLaren, Nellie Harger, Lizzie Harger, Gracie Turner, Eva Turner, Donnie Wonacott, Carrie Wonacott, Ed. Bigham, Maud McDonald, Alex. McDonald, Albert Martin, Fred. Bigham, Tom Hutchinson, Annie Brook. MRS, H. H. WELSH, teacher."

BIRTHDAY PARTY.—A large number of invitations were issued to a party at the Whitney House, Lone Pine, last Wednesday evening. The occasion was the twenty-third birthday of Mr. C. H. Groves, County Superintendent. The invitations, were responded to in person by all who could possibly attend, many persons going from Independence and from the Fort. The guests were entertained in right hospitable style, all the ample resources of the Whitney House being fully employed for their use. During the first part of the evening the company was entertained in the parlors by music, singing, and social games till supper time, after which dancing begun and was kept up till morning. The party was a perfect success throughout.

A NEW MINING REGION DISCOVERED—The Sonora Union-Democrat says, Frank Pickle and William Hassell returned on Thursday last from a prospecting trip in the high Sierras. They have discovered an immense ledge or series of ledges about eight miles east of the summit. The main ledge, which they named the Tuolumne. is fully forty feet wide, of gold.bearing quartz, much of it decomposed. Ten locations were made. A cut was run into the ledge sufficient to show the extent and character of the deposit. Now, all that remains to be done to prove its value is to test the quality of the ore. Messrs. Pickle and Hassell say that the facilities for working the property are unexcelled, except in the matter of transportation. There is an ample supply of timber for fuel, and timbers growing right in the mines, and water-power enough to run any number of stamps. If the ore comes up any where near expectations, and the discovery is a veritable bonanza.

Personal Mention.

Mr. Harmon came up from Darwin last Friday night.

E. H. Edwards was up from Lone Pine Wednesday.

Jack Gunn has been up from Darwin for some days.

George Gill has been traveling through the lower end of the county most of the week.

Harry Hartshorn returned to Big Pine last Saturday from Boston, where he had been on a three months' visit.

S. D. Woods left here last Sunday night for San Francisco, on business; he is expected back about the middle of next week.

B. L. Rowe has fully recovered from the effects of a fall at Bishop Creek some weeks ago. He left here last Monday night, intending to go to Hawthorne.

Mr, J. L. Bourland, of Bishop Creek, has gone on a visit to his old home in Tuolumne county. He will be gone some weeks, as this is the first visit he has made to his old friends in many weeks.

A. C. Knox, agent for the Pacific Rural Press, and Mining and Scientific Press, is making a trip through Owens valley. He was in Independence last Thursday, and from here went on to Lone Pine and Keeler.

Mr. Tom. Lynch, a miner, well known among us, has arrived here to begin work on the mines owned by San Francisco capitalists near Bend City. It is to be hoped that he will make developments to induce the employment of capital on a large scale.

W. K. Miller is about to start on a trip to his old home in Pennsylvania. Mr. Miller left home a beardless boy, twenty five years ago, he will return a gray haired man, with two motherless children that he intends to leave in care of his own mother, who still enjoys a vigorous old age.

P. W. Forbes came down from Bishop Creek last Sunday, to attend to cases in the Superior Court this week. Mr. Forbes arrived in time to accept an invitation to discourse to a select audience in the evening; the subject chosen might be classed under the head of "Manners and Morals." The audience took lively interest in the discourse.

Bee-Keepers' National Convention.

The North American Bee-Keepers' Society will meet in convention at the city of Rochester, N. Y., on Oct. 28th, 29th, and 30th. The Vice-Presidents, of which each State has one, are expected to forward reports from their respective States. Mr. Wm. Muth-Rasmussen, of Independence, who is the Vice-President for California, therefore desires the bee-keepers of Inyo county to send him their statements, on postal cards, giving the number of colonies of bees on hand and the amount of comb, extracted or strained honey produced this season; that he, with the reports from other counties, may be able to make out a general report, which will be creditable to the State.

As it will be in the interest of the whole fraternity to know the extent of the honey industry of the United States, and as this can only be accomplished by everybody contributing his share to the general report, it is to be hoped that every owner of bees, whether he has only one hive or is the happy possessor of a hundred colonies, will send their statements to Mr. Muth-Rasmussen, not later than October 18th.

The report of the Convention will be published in THE INYO INDEPENDENT, when it is received by the Vice-President.

STATE TAX.—The State tax has been fixed at 46 cents 2 mills on each hundred dollars.

GONE INSANE. Last Tuesday Mrs. Amelia Rittgers, wife of Israel Rittgers of Lone Pine, was brought to town to be examined on her mental condition; Dr's Stevenson and Blair made an examination and pronounced her insane, and Judge Hannah ordered that she be sent to the asylum at Napa. Her husband left here with her on Thursday night. Mrs. Rittgers is a native of Missouri, her age is about forty years, she has no children. She was always of a religious turn of mind, and her convictions appears to be growing deeper till about two weeks ago, when her friends began to suspect that her mind was diseased; since then she was most of the time very violent and distructive. It had become evident that she could no longer be safely kept at home, and taking her to the Asylum because a necesity The family and the poor sufferer herself have the sympathy of many friends in this terrible offliction.

THE AURORA STYLE.—Over in Aurora when there is a shindig there is no monotony about their final leave taking at the breaking up of the party. Last Saturday night there was a dance over there, and, with a view doubtless to prevent any encroachment upon the Sabbath, about eleven o'clock a man named Jack Andrews entered the room with a double-barreled shotgun in his hands, and blood in his eye. Andrews forced his entrance at the door while the party were enjoying a polka, and quickly marching up to the music-stand, presented a shotgun to the terrified musicians, ordered them to cease, under the penalty of blowing B flat clear into upper C. The musicians obeyed without argument or an effort to soothe the savage breast, and the ladies, with their escorts, rushed wildly for the door. The dance was broken up after the true orthodox dime-novel style, and soon Deputy Sheriff Hank Jewett placed Jack under arrest. There is not much consideration at Aurora for a man who has a very zealous regard for the observance of the sacred day.

BISHOP CREEK CORRESPONDENCE.

BISHOP CREEK, Oct. 6, 1884.

EDITOR INDEPENDENT; Dear Sir:—Weather very pleasant here to-day. Mr. Forbes, of Forbes & Tobey, lumber dealers, is here to-day. Last Saturday evening L. P. Springstead's saloon was broken into. The till was broken open, but luckily he had removed the contents before departing, except about 50 cents' worth of 10-cent pieces. They also got away with two revolvers—one a Colt's old-fashoned pistol, and one 44-caliber silver mounted Smith & Wesson. There is no positive clue as to whom the parties are, but a sharp look-out is being kept. — Mr. and Mrs. John Dormer depart for their home in Carson to-night. — The Collins Comedy Company perform here to-morrow night. Henry Keyes, Phœnix Insurance agent, is here. — Ground-hog billiards (croquet) is all the rage here.—The Casey Mining Co., under the superintendence of M. L. Cook, resumed operations this morning.

TUESDAY, Oct. 7th.—Last night we had a Chinese wedding. A Chinese cook in the employ of Mrs. Clark, our hotel keeper, was married, Rev. Andrew Clark performing the ceremony. The marriage was American style. A great many ladies and gentlemen were present. There were wine, whisky, beer, cider and cake in abundance. The Chinaman was highly pleased over the affair.—Geo. Stevens has been confined to his house by sickness for the last week. He is on the improve now. —T. F. A. Connelly was here last week. He and Geo. M. Gill had a "set-to" in McDonald & Riddle's hotel. Which one got away with the talk I can't say. It was a hard, close game.

OCT. 9th, 1884.—Wm. Matlack was here on an electioneering tour.—Rained here pretty hard this afternoon.

FALSTAFF.

Celestial Wedding.

BISHOP CREEK, Oct. 7th, 1884.

EDITOR INDEPENDENT:—On the evening of the 6th inst., quite a rare and pleasing affair happened in our quiet little town, in the way of a marriage of the two Celestials, Wan Suey and Tu Sin, the Rev. A. Clark officiating. The bride was adorned in an elegant blue brocaded silk, sent from San Francisco, especially for the occasion. Her hair was arranged in the usual style peculiar to the race. The affair was witnessed by 25 or 30 American ladies and gentlemen, among whom were Mr. and Mrs. Dr. J. S. Newland, Mr. and Mrs. M. L. Cook, Mrs. R. A. Clark, Mrs. J. Elkeles, Mrs. T. C. Hutchinson, Miss Mamie Clark and Messrs. Freeman, Levy, Springstead, Middleton, Bulpitt, Newland, Schober, Forman, George, Clark, Yaney, Dunn, Godmer, Hutchins, and Dr. G. B. Carr. Liquors of all kinds, and cakes were plentifully bestowed on the guests. About the only deviation from the generality of such occurrences was that all present failed to kiss the bride; but, of course, this was on account of her timidity. Nevertheless it was a very enjoyable affair. One notable feature was that the ceremony was witnessed by only one Celestial other than the bride and groom. After extending our congratulations, and wishing them a long and happy life, the company dispersed.

SUBSCRIBER.

Here and There.

—The many friends of Mr. and Mrs Gorman will tenderly sympathize with them in their grief for the loss of their baby.

—Big Pine is a very attractive place just now; the attraction is so powerful that it draws young men all the way from Independence.

—We were treated to the novelty of the season last Thursday. Peals of thunder were heard among the mountains several times during the day, and toword evening there was a nice shower of warm rain.

—The ruling passion is very strong in death in the rear end of a wasp. When the connection is severed between the back action and the front part of the concern, for a long time afterward the small looking, but large feeling sting will de poked about in quite a lively manner, and if trial is made it is found to have lost none of its power to make a lively and lasting impression. The sting of the wasp is like the tongue of a slanderer it continues to wound even when the detested owner is dead.

—Mr. J. B. Reddick had a fair attendance to hear him speak on the political issues; he confined himself mostly to the question of protection for American industry. Mr. Reddick is not a born orator; when speaking he reminds one of the remark made by Jackson about Benton—"He labors like an ox." Mr. Reddick keeps one elbow pinned to his sidelike the wing of a fowl trussed for roasting, while the other hand is fumbling with a vest button, like a school boy who had forgotten, for feared to forget, his recitation. In spite of his manner he was listened to with attention, as he presented many important facts. His matter was excellent, his manner was execrable.

REDUCED FARE.—On the arrival of all trains at Independence station, comfortable conveyance and good horses are in attendance to carry passengers to any part of town for fifty cents each.

MINING ITEMS.

CASEY MINE.

In last week's issue a mistaken report was made of this mine; operations have not been suspended, as was then stated. The Superintendent, Mr. M. L. Cook, has since reported that the present force of men will be continued at work till the first of next May, at least. It affords much pleasure to make this correction.

MINING DECISION.

The Secratary of the Interior in recent rulings has held: A party in possession is not compelled to purchase mines from the Government: and if he complies with the laws of possessory right, his title is as good for all practical purposes as if secured by patent. This syllabus, although technically true, is calculated to mislead miners and mine claimants. An indifference or neglect which often involves tedious and expensive litigation, and in many cases proves fatal to the claim so neglected. Our advice is to proceed to patent at the earliest practicable moment whatever is worthy of being patented. Seldom if ever, has the owner of a claim of intrinsic value regretted the procurement of a patent for it, and countless instances have occurred where failure to secure this Government title has wrought perplexity and serious loss. The obtainment of a receiver's receipt is to all intents and purposes equivalent to patenting, for it has been repeatebly decided by the United States Supreme Caurt that "The right to a patent once vested is treated by the Government, when dealing with their public lands, as equivalent to a patent issued. When, in fact, the patent does issue, it relates back to the inception of right of the patentee, so far as it may be necessary to cut off intervening claimants."

FRUIT trees were badly damaged las week by a snow storm in Nevada. Snow in October would be a surprise in Owens Valley.

THE RUGBY COLONY.

Some of the Results Accomplished by Tom Hughes' Experiment.

[Rugby Cor. Commercial Gazette.]

The Rugby colony is by no means the failure that many people, scantily informed in regard to it, vaguely imagined it to be. Those settlers who were able to give an affirmative answer to Tom Hughes' question, "Am I prepared for some years, during the working hours of the day, to live the life of a peasant; or, in other words, to earn my living out of the soil by my own labor?" are doing more than well. It is this limitation. "during working hours," which forms one of the chief attractions of the settlement. For at other times, when the settler's work is done, he finds himself in a cultured society, within easy reach of all the real essentials of civilization, beginning with a library of 6,000 volumes, and one of the best tennis courts in the States, don't you know. Whoever is ready, as Mr. Emerson puts it, to place himself in primary relations with the soil and nature, and to take his part bravely with his own hands in the manual labor of this world, will find at Rugby as favorable conditions for his experiment as he is likely to get in any part of the world. It is not claimed that the Board of Aid Lands have the rich soil of the Mississippi bottoms or the Illinois prairies, but neither does the deadly malaria stalk around in the darkness. There is, however, plenty of timber, a perfectly healthful and delicious climate, cheap land, convenient markets and easy access to one of the greatest railway lines of the country—the Queen and Crescent.

The culture of the vine, which has been quietly in progress for the past two years, promises to be in the near future the leading agricultural interest at Rugby. Madame Hughes, Mr. Fisher, Mr. Walker, and Dr. Kemp have given special attention to this matter, and have demonstrated that the soil is wonderfully well suited to grape culture. Dr. Kemp, who has critically investigated the subject, has a vineyard of 500 plants in fine condition, and loaded with fruit, and is convinced that this is the solution of the question that often occurs to the Board of Aid Land Company: "What will we do with it?"

At Wartburg, twenty miles south of Rugby, a Louisiana gentleman, a successful wine merchant in New Orleans and Marseilles, and thoroughly familiar with the Bordeaux and Champagne countries, has established very successful vineyards. His productions compare most favorably with the French wines. The grapes in this region are singularly free from the "foxy" tang which is so unfavorable in the wines made from the Ohio and California grapes, and which recalls that vin du Surenne which Brillat-Savarin says requires three men to drink a glass full, one man to drink and two friends to stand on either side and coax and encourage him.

Dr. Kemp, a man (a Bostonian, en passant), of wide attainments and careful scientific training, is confident that Old Hickory's prediction that the Cumberland plateau would be the "garden spot of Tennessee," is sure to be verified, and that it will one day be a vast vineyard. Those know who are familiar with the claret country that it is a stretch of land between the Landes and Pyrenees, a red-and-gray waste, where not even chickweed will grow, but that it furnishes the influences which produce grapes, yielding the most generous and consummately flavored wine ever drank by man since Noah planted the first vine slip. That the desolate wastes of Missionary Ridge should become the garden spot of Chattanooga is not more unlikely than that we should ten years hence drink "Yundilla" and "Chateau Uffington," worth half a sovereign a bottle, and made from grapes grown in Rugby vineyards.

Nowhere have the possibilities of the Cumberland plateau been better demonstrated than at Tre-Forest farm, the property of Mr. Blacklock, at the "Glades," Mr. Montgomerie Boyle's place, and at "Kenmure," by the Messrs. Marshall. They have subdued the wilderness, and are being rewarded by fine crops of corn, wheat, rye, potatoes, and all small vegetables. The writer had the pleasure of making the tour of a rye field at Tre-Forest farm, that had been pronounced by a native expert to be fit only to raise a crop of grasshoppers. The average stalks in that field were full six feet high some ambitious spears standing up a foot or so above their fellows. The substantial house at Tre-Forest faces the east, and commands a glorious view of the Cumberland range, stretching for leagues to the southward. These blue hills are a source of never-ending delight to the household and visitors. We should perhaps except one of the young Blacklocks, who, tired of hearing the praises of the blue hills reiterated, said: "Mother, what can you see in those hills? They look to me like a big giant's grave." Mr. Dyer, Mrs. Hughes' gardener, has decidedly the model vegetable garden on the plateau. Here are raised in perfection peas, beans, tomatoes, English lettuce—the heads sixteen inches high, bound up to bleach the leaves, and make them as white and crisp as celery; cabbages as big as water-buckets, a very thrifty plantation of vines, and much else calculated to give the lie to the theories of men whose exhaustive knowledge of agriculture is derived mainly from watering flower-pots in Camden Place, London.

Uffington house, the residence of Madame Hughes, mother of Tom Hughes, is a source of affectionate interest to even the casual visitor of Rugby. This venerable woman, who has seen many things in many lands, and sipped the wine of life far beyond the years appointed by the psalmist, and who has so mastered the art of growing old gracefully as to make one fairly in love with age, seems in this perfect climate to have discovered Ponce de Leon's fabled fountain of youth. To see her making the tour of her rose garden, leaning on the arm of her granddaughter, Mr. Hastings Hughes' fair-haired lassie; to sit beside her on her vine-shaded porch and watch the new moon come up over the wooded hills, are pleasures to linger long in the memory.

FLOWERS IN THE GREEN-ROOM.

The lights are out in the hall and the
The tones of cornet and viol and flute;
Only her voice seems lingering nigh,
The soul of a sound that cannot die.

There lie the flowers she wore; and, hark!
What is it whispering through the dark?
Was it thus that fauns and dryads spoke,
In the satyr's haunt, by the babbling oak.

"I was the white rose in her hair!
In the fragrant dusk I shone more fair.
Fast entwined with a silken strand,
I clung like a lover's tender hand."

"I was the lily she chose! For such Boon of her exquisite fingers' touch,
The prince who stood at her carriage door,
Would barter the half of his land and more!"

"Hear me, sisters! My lot was best!
I was the red rose on her breast.
I rose and fell with her innocent heart
Unspoiled by praises, unschooled by art."

"Nay! never was fate as mine so sweet!
I was the violet under her feet!
Under her feet, that knew not, lying,
Mine to perfume her path in dying!"

A PROFESSION, OR A TRADE

Something for the Wide Awake 16-Year-Old Boy to Think Over.

But, as I told you at the outset, if you have arrived at the age of 15 or 16 it is time you looked matters square in the face and had some idea of your future. If you were to answer at once you would say that you would take a profession in preference to a trade. A profession means several years of hard study, quite a large cash outlay and then trials and rebuffs to get a start in business. It is one thing to graduate as a lawyer or a doctor, and quite another to pick up clients and patients. If you have fully decided on a profession be careful as your first move. If you have a large head your grandmother has doubtless many times exclaimed: "What a great lawyer this boy would make!" Don't try to make one on the strength of your head. We've got any number of that class in the country now, and they can't pay their grocers' bills. If you can pull a sliver out of your finger without winking, it may be a sign that you would make a great surgeon. It may be also a sign that you are born to be a butcher.

How will you know what to pursue? Your own feelings are the safest guide. If left to your parents and to circumstances you may be forced into a trade or profession which you can never make a success. When you come to realize that you must make your own way in life your particular forte will be apt to reveal itself. One of the best lawyers in Detroit was intended for the ministry; another served three years as a journalist, but all the time feeling that he was out of his element; another was forced by his father to learn the trade of harness maker. I know a machinist who at first studied medicine; of a watchmaker who tried to become a lawyer; of a carpenter who threw away three years of his life trying to become a dentist.

After you have selected your profession or trade, what then? Strive to master it in all its details and to excel. If you become a carpenter don't be satisfied when you can saw and plane and match. Don't be satisfied with $2 per day. Make yourself worth $3. Master details and push yourself from carpenter to builder. Don't imagine that a man in search of a lawyer walks down the street and stops at the first sign hanging out. It is the lawyer who has climbed above his fellows that he seeks out. If our friends are ill we want the best doctor. We want the man who has made himself the best by study and energy. The blacksmith who is content to mend old wagons will never iron a new one. The machinist who stands at the lathe to do about so much work in ten hours need not hope to be better off. It is the men who put their heart into what they do who succeed.—M. Quad's Letter.

Spurgeon's Jokes.

I remember a grave pastor remonstrating with the mighty Baptist. "I wonder now," said the dull old fellow, "how you, as an influential minister, can reconcile it to your conscience to make so many jokes in the pulpit?" "You wouldn't though," said Spurgeon, "if you knew how many I kept to myself."—London Truth.

A Connecticut company manufactures nearly all the licorice used in this country—about 17,000,000 pounds in a year. A large portion is used by chemists and confectioners, and the remainder goes into tobacco.

So naturalists observe, a flea
Has smaller fleas that on him prey,
And these have smaller still to bite 'em,
And so proceed, ad infinitum.

THE NIGHT WATCHMAN'S SPOTTER.

A Machine Which Makes Its Report to the Boss Every Morning.

"This business was bad enough," said the night watchman, "before those infernal spotting-machines were introduced, but now I am thinking seriously of going out to the work-house for a vacation."

"What are you talking about? What is the trouble?"

"Trouble enough. Half the manufactories in the city that employ night watchmen have lately put in a little machine that keeps an eye on the men, and tells the proprietor in the morning exactly how they have spent the night, and in order to keep the machine running the watchman is compelled to spend half his time grinding away at a little crank. We have twelve of them in our place scattered at different points through the building—one in the top story, one in the basement—and I am expected to visit each one and grind away at it at least once every hour. I go on duty at six in the evening and off at six the next morning, giving me twelve solid hours of watching, which, at twelve grinds an hour, makes 144 grinding spells in the course of a night."

"Would it be against the rules for me to go with you to the factory and see the instrument?"

"Oh, hang the rules. I am going to get out of the place as soon as I can anyhow. No; come, if you like."

The factory was completely deserted, and during the examination that followed the night watchman and the writer had the place entirely to themselves.

The first point visited was the office.

"You see that clock?" asked the watchman, pointing to a large office-clock, cased in black walnut, which was slowly ticking upon the wall above the safe. "Well, that clock is connected by wires with every room in the building from top to bottom. It contains a registering instrument which keeps tally on a long piece of tape—like a stock-ticker's tape—of every place that the watchman visits in the course of the night. If he hunts out a soft corner and goes to sleep for an hour or two, the paper will tell the boss all about it in the morning. If he rushes about like a wild Indian, upstairs and down, down stairs and up, all night, it will tell the truth about the matter, and the boss will think that he has a good man at work for him. But the fact of the matter is, since this thing was introduced, I pay more attention to making a good record on the tally-sheet than I do for guarding the property."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

The Latest Poison Scare.

This time it is the water obtained from bored wells that is made the cause of a poison scare. Some health-board doctors have been analyzing it, and they report that it is highly deleterious—in fact dangerous. Most of the water they have examined has been used in the manufacture of mineral water, and since their report was made there has been a rapid spread of belief that it is much safer to drink mineral water than to drink it—to the marked detriment of the trade in that beverage. Though some of the water is brought from a depth of 200 feet, the doctors say it is none the safer for that. No matter how far below the surface it may be, the drainage gets down to it, contaminates it and makes it unfit for the much persecuted human stomach.

It is the most wonderful thing in the world that everybody living in Gotham, or even visiting in it, did not die by poisoning long ago. At one time or another the health-board doctors have told us that the wine, whisky and beer we drank are poisoned, our tea and coffee are poisoned; a great deal of the meat we eat is poisoned; even the air we breathe, in our rooms or out of them, is rank with poison; every way we turn there is poison, poison, poison right before us. And yet, somehow, we don't die a bit faster than other people. Even the health-board itself has to admit that the death rate is steadily declining. New York is better off now, in a sanitary sense, than it has been for years. As for that poisonous water scare, it probably won't amount to much, and I think there is very little cause for it anyway.—"Caspar's" New York Letter.

Society Girls' Amanuensis.

"Didn't you know that we society girls had to employ an amanuensis as well as you business men? The weather is too warm and our correspondence too voluminous for us to think of writing or answering our own notes, especially since there is a real nice girl—you know her; she was in our set before her father failed—who will come whenever she is wanted to write them for us.

"Some of the girls have her call one morning each week, others once in two weeks and others monthly. I believe she promises to write in a different style for each person, but it is hard to do, as she must have nearly twenty regular customers. She will write a note just as dictated or else dress up her patron's ideas in words of her own. And if it is wished she will furnish even the stationery. She must make a good deal of money, as she charged me $1.50 for a half dozen formal invitations, which she fixed up in less than an hour. I believe she charges pretty high for long letters of a sentimental nature only. I wish I knew all the secrets and gossip that she does."—Enquirer Interview.

Very Little.

"How can you account for those fine stalks of corn coming up in the fence corners?" asked a man of a farmer.

"That's not corn," replied the farmer, "only weeds."

"Ah, how singular."

"Don't know much about farmin', I reckin'."

"Very little. I am the editor of an agricultural paper.—Arkansaw Traveler.

A Leaf from the Diary of William Maclay—1789.

It appears that Washington was in favor of an additional title to be bestowed upon the president, and recommended that of "His High Mightiness," which was applied to the stadtholders of Holland.

A committee was chosen to consider the subject, and decided upon "His Elective Majesty" as the proper thing. It was taken from the practice of Poland. The report was debated at length. "Mr. Lee, of Virginia," writes Mr. Maclay, "who was a Simon-pure democrat, appearing to favor all titles, led the business. He took the ground that all the world, civilized and savage, called for titles. There was something in human nature that occasioned this general consent. Therefore he conceded that it was right.

"Mr. Ellsworth was in favor of a kingly title. Mr. Izard, of South Carolina, supported him. Mr. Carroll, of Maryland, and Mr Maclay argued that 'The President' was the constitutional title, and that the chief magistrate needed no other. Mr. Ellsworth ridiculed the suggestion. He enumerated how common the appellation of president was, there being president of fire companies and cricket clubs. He believed that some of the States authorized titles by their constitutions. The president reminded him that Connecticut did.

"Mr. Izard moved that the title of the president be 'His Excellency.' Mr. Lee proposed 'His Elective Highness,' and made a long speech to the effect that such a title would add weight, dignity, importance and authority to the Government, at home and abroad."

Mr. Maclay replied that "it was impossible for any title to add to the respect entertained for General Washington. If you give them the title of any foreign prince or potentate, a belief would follow that the manners of that prince and his modes of government would be adopted by the president. There were none of them that could enter the lists of true glory with him."

The report of the committee was rejected and another appointed to invent a suitable title.

"This whole silly business," says Mr. Maclay, "is the work of Mr. Adams and Mr. Lee. Izard follows Lee, and the New England men, who herd together, always follow Adams. A court our house seems determined on, and to run into all the fooleries, fopperies and pomp of royal etiquette."

The second committee came to an agreement the next day, and reported as the title for the president, "His Elective Highness, President of the United States, and Protector of the Rights of the Same." Then followed another long debate, during which Mr. Maclay says: "There was visible anxiety in the chair." Finally Mr. Adams took the floor and made an extended speech in favor of the adoption of the report. "For forty minutes," says the diary, "did he harangue us, and found fault with almost everything. He spoke with great asperity. 'Gentlemen, I must tell you,' said Mr. Adams, 'it is you and the president that have the making of titles. Suppose the president should have the appointment of Mr. Jefferson at the court of France. Mr. Jefferson is, in virtue of this appointment, the most illustrious, the most powerful, and what not? But the president himself must be something that includes all the dignities of the diplomatic corps and something still greater. What will the common people of foreign countries say? What will the soldiers and sailors? George Washington, president of the United States! They will despise him and our Government.'"

Under the influence of Mr Adams the report was adopted, and the senate agreed to confer upon the president the title above given with a slight amendment, making it read: "His Highness, President of the United States, and Protector of their Liberties." The house of representatives declined, however, to concur with the senate in this important decision. The title was actually laughed out of congress, and Mr. Maclay proceeds to say that the word "highness" could be properly applied only to men of great stature. "Let America be searched," he said, "and the tallest man be made president. The honor will probably be confered upon some huge Patagonian."

There was another long debate upon the question whether members of congress should be called "honorable," but there never was a decision upon it.

St. Joe's Welcome to Prof. Proctor.

On behalf of the intelligent citzens of St. Joseph, the Herald extends a hearty welcome to Prof. Richard Proctor, the eminent English astronomer and scientist. He comes to pass at least a season here, where his wife, we believe, was born and raised. Though not designing to make this his permanent place of habitation, by reason of his literary engagements that will keep him abroad much of his time, the home of his wife and children will be here for some years, and the latter will be reared under the free institutions of the United States. This has been a secret ambition of Professor Proctor, and is a guarantee that he comes in the character, not only of a world-renowned man but as a warm friend. St. Joseph, therefore, has a duplex reason for feeling honored, and during his residence here we hope that he may have cause to remember St. Joseph with as much kindliness as St. Joseph can have to feel proud of the privilege of treating him as her guest.—St. Joseph (Mo.) Herald.

Artificial Sponge.

Dr. Gamgee, of Birmingham, England, has been interesting the Paris surgeons with his artificial sponge. It is made of cotton, rendered absorbent and treated with antiseptics. One of them of the size of a walnut will absorb water until it reaches the dimensions of a cricket ball. One of its most important advantages is cheapness; this quality makes it unnecessary to use it more than once, so that "sponge infection" becomes an easily obviated evil.

Caught by a Shark.

They that go down into the sea sometimes meet with thrilling adventures. A year ago, two divers were engaged in recovering portions of the cargo of a vessel sunk off the coast of North Carolina. They were on their fourth descent when one of them hastily signalled to be drawn up. On being hauled into the boat, he said that his comrade had been seized by a monster shark. Scarcely had he told the story, when the comrade rose to the surface. He was picked up insensible, with several holes in the metallic part of his diving suit. When he recovered his consciousness, he told this story:—

"We made our fourth descent, and while my companion clambered into the vessel, I waited on the ground till he should attach the cords to draw something out.

I was just about to signal to be drawn up for a moment's rest when I noticed a shadowy body moving at some distance above me and towards me.

I was not thinking of danger, and my first thought was that it was the shadow of a passing boat.

By this time the shadow had come nearer and taken shape. It scarcely needed a glance to show me that it was a man-eater and of the largest size.

Had I signalled to be drawn up then, it would have been certain death. All I could do was to remain still until it left. It lay off about twenty feet, just outside the rigging of the ship, its body motionless, its fins barely stirring the water about its gills.

Involuntarily I shrunk closer to the side of the vessel, but my first movement betrayed my presence. I saw the shining eyes fixed upon me, its tail quivered as it darted at me.

I shrank closer to the side of the ship. I saw it turn on one side, its mouth open, and heard the teeth snap as it darted by me.

It had missed me, but only for a moment; the sweep of its mighty tail had thrown me forward. I saw it turn, balance itself, and its tail quivered as it darted at me again. There was no escape.

It turned on its back as it swooped down on me like a hawk on a sparrow. The cadaverous jaws opened, and the long, shining teeth grated as they closed on my metal harness.

It had me. I could feel its teeth grinding upon my copper breastplate.

Having seized me, it went tearing through the water, I could feel it bound forward at each stroke of its tail. Had it not been for my copper helmet, my head would have been torn off by the rush through the water.

I was perfectly conscious, but somehow I felt no terror at all, only a feeling of numbness. I wondered how long it would be before those teeth would crunch through, and whether they would strike first into my back or my breast.

Then I thought of my wife and the baby, and who would take care of them, or if she would ever know what had become of me.

All these thoughts passed through my brain in an instant, but in that time the connecting air-tube had been snapped, and my head seemed ready to burst with pressure.

Then I felt the cold water begin to pour in and hear the bubble, bubble, as the air escaped into the creature's mouth.

I began to hear great guns and to see fire-works and rainbows, and sunshine, and all kinds of pretty things; then I thought I was floating away on a rosy cloud, dreaming to the sound of sweet music.

Then all became blank. The shark might have eaten me then at his leisure, and I never should have been the wiser.

Imagine my astonishment, then, when I opened my eyes on board this boat and saw you fellows around me. Yes, sir, I thought I was dead and eaten up, sure.—Youth's Companion.

Neighbors in New York.

I don't know the name of my next door neighbor; my family knows it, I don't. I live in a block of eight houses; I know the names of the occupants of five, and I know three of the families only, and I am not a very unsociable fellow either. Of course you have read of the two families who met in Rome and became very much attached to each other. They drove out every day in each other's company, and saw all the sights together. On parting, they exchanged cards, and, to the surprise of both, found that they lived next door to each other in New York, and had done so for several years. That is a tolerably broad illustration of the universal fact here that, as a rule, neighborhood sociability doesn't exist.

One thing is peculiarly noticeable, and that is the absolute absence of anything like social intercourse between journalists. It would be absurd to suppose that Mr. Jones ever speaks to Mr. Whitelaw Reid, and for a time Mr. Reid and Mr. Dana didn't exchange salutations; I don't know what they do now. Mr. Bennett is on terms with all his colleagues, but, as he is abroad most of the time, it would be absurd to quote him, especially as when he is here his intercourse with other editors and proprietors is purely perfunctory and very rare. We have a Press club in this city, and it is a growing institution, but I believe none of the chief editors belong to it. Neither Mr. Dana, Mr. Reid, Mr. Pulitzer, Mr. Jones, old Stone of the Journal of Commerce—I mention him in full because you probably never heard of him—Maj. Bundy, Parke Godwin nor the editor of the Evening Post, whose name I really do not know, has anything whatever to do with the Press club. Some of these gentlemen belong to other and wealthier clubs, but, so far as the profession of journalism is concerned, they do nothing to help it or its members along the rugged path of life, save as their individual interests dictate and their individual pockets profit.—

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 18, ...1884.

Published Every Saturday, by
C. MULHOLLAND.

It is reported that the Mount Diablo Company, at Candelaria, will shortly erect a 20-stamp mill at Soda Springs, on the Carson & Colorado Railroad.

The remains of T. J. Cover, a pioneer, were found on the Mojave Desert, on the 5th inst. Cover was en route to look after some of his mining property.

The Borax works of Wm. T. Coleman & Co., have stopped operations on the Amargosa mines and have taken their forces to Furnace Creek in Death valley, where they are putting in works to crystalize a much larger quantity of refined borax than formerly.

The Oro Grande Mining Comany has just declared and disbursed the September dividend, from the King mine of Calico, the sum of $22,000. This makes the total dividends of last four months $101,000.—Calico Print.

Governor Tritle of Arizona has offered $1,000 reward for the arrest and conviction of the murderers of Rafferty, Raymond, Fritz and Mrs. Fritz, who were brutally murdered lately in the Huachuca Mountains. The slaughter is attributed to the Mexicans.

John Ogden, of Camptonville, Nevada county, Cal: was killed while out hunting on Wednesday last by the accidental discharge of his gun. He was well known as a mining prospector all over the Pacific coast. He formerly resided in Hydesville, Humbolt county, and afterward in Sutter county.

The great colonies of England are framing protective tariff laws against the manufactures of the mother country. Experience has taught these colonies that without manufactures there can be no great prosperity, and without protection there can be no manufactures in young communities.

Peter Nelson, a Del Norte county man, shot a six-point buck a few days ago, and, when he went up to cut its throat, the deer leaped to its feet, throwing Nelson some distance, and in an instant was over his prostrate body, trying to gore him with its horns. After a severe struggle Peter manage to get from under the enraged animal and made a hasty retreat.

Last Saturday Judge Conklin addressed a very large meeting at Salinas. The report says: "Two of the largest meetings held in this county for years were held last night at Monterey and to-night at this place. Over one hundred persons came over from Monterey, and a large torchlight procession paraded the streets. These meetings were addressed by Hon. A. R. Conklin and ex-Congressman Page."

It is reported that the British frigate Shannon, which fought the great sea-duel with the American ship Chesapeaks in 1813, on which occasion the immortal Captain Lawrence met his death, his last injunction being the memorable words, "Don't give up the ship," is now lying peacefully in New York harbor, loading petroleum for England. Long ago she was reconstructed for the merchant service, but her hull is substantially the same today as it was eighty-four years ago, the date of her launching.

Last Monday, in Lancaster, Pennsylvania, a boy named Lawrence L. Conley, of Philadelphia, aged fifteen years, shot Mamie Benson, aged fourteen. The shot fired at the girl made a painful but not fatal wound. Conley some time ago was employed in the Lancaster watch factory, where the girl was also employed. He fell in love with her, left Lancaster early in June and went to Philadelphia. He persisted in sending the girl protestations of his affection, also letters threatening to kill her if she refused to receive his attentions. He returned to Lancaster ten days before the shooting, and meeting the girl on the street shot her and then himself.

The price of land is rapidly depreciating in England. The aristocracy are reported to be feeling a falling off in their incomes, and there is much dissatisfaction among all classes. A titled female, Lady Gaskill, proposes, in a magazine article, as a remedy for all this, that the farmers and their wives and daughters should cease to be educated, should avoid pianos and decent clothing, rise at 3 o'clock in the morning and spend all the day among the beasts in the field. She points out a moral by bringing forward a model farming family whose chief peculiarity is that they speak atrociously bad English and eat meat only once a week. England affords a remarkably good opportunity for observing the effects of free trade. Like the drunkard, she is trying as a cure a hair of the dog that bit her, only to become worse all the time.

One day last week Daniel Le Barron and George Estile, two miners prospecting near Jackson Creek, Humbolt County, Nevada, on returning to their camp found a large gray wolf devouring their provisions. A charge of small shot which was fired at the animal only caused it to turn upon them, and the next moment they were engaged in mortal conflict with the infuriated beast, which was dispatched only after Le Barron was dreadfully lacerated.

About 4 o'clock last Saturday morning an explosion occured at the new Parliament buildings Quebes, destroying a considerable portion of the machinery and windows of the building, which was just being roofed in. The explosion at first was supposed to be the boiler of the engine used for hoisting material, but this proved not the case. Neither can it be attributed to gas. The general impression appears to be that the explosion was caused by dynamite, but as none of this compound was used on the works, the mystery is how it came there. An investigation is now being held. The workmen all being away to dinner only one man was injured, and he escaped with a slight cut from a piece of stone. The shock was very severe all over the city, and the windows of the houses in that vicinity were badly shattered. Of course this has been attributed to Irish dinamiters; when any thing unusual occurs in England or the colonies this is always what is said.

D. M. Burns, Secretary of State during the administration of Governor Perkins, has surrendered himself, and is under arrest, charged with stealing money belonging to the State. To a Chronicle reporter who called upon him in prison, Mr. Burns said: "When I took my office as State Secretary I was worth some $25,000, which I afterward lost in mining interests in Mexico. Before my term of office expired I discovered that Thomas H. Reynolds, my assistant, was short in his accounts and I commenced an investigation of the books. In a short time I ascertained that he was over $12,000 behind in his accounts, and when I demanded an explanation he admitted that he had taken the money, but was unable to replace it. He then suggested several methods by which the defalcation could be covered up, and I told him that if I had the money I would replace the stolen funds and save him from disgrace. You see, the stealing commenced a few days after I entered upon the duties of the office, and it is not reasonable to believe that I took the money, as at that time I had over $25,000. I did not want to see him disgraced, and I kept the matter quiet." Mr. Burns may be innocent of stealing, but he was three years in office, and if this assistant began stealing right at the start, and kept it up undiscovered till near the close of the term of office, the Secretary cannot have given much attention to the affairs of his office. When Mr. Burns discovered the alleged stealing of Reynolds he should at once have had him arrested. It is a false notion of honor that will induce an honest man to peril his own fair fame in order to screen a thief.

It is reported that many white male children are sold to Chinese in San Francisco. A Call reporter having heard that this was a fact, recently visited Chinatown to investigate the matter, and says:

"Entering a store on Sacramento street, a pleasant looking Chinaman in charge was asked if he knew anything about the predilection shown by his countrymen for white babies.

"You likee sell 'em baby?" he asked. "Me likee buy one fine boy."

This cool business proposition was unexpected, but the visitor concluded to take advantage of it, and cautiously inquired what he would give for a fine boy. The heathen stated that an ordinary boy was worth about $30, but an exceptionally fine male infant might command $50. A girl he would not take as a gift. The visitor then informed him that he had no child for sale, but desired to know what became of the white children bought by Chinamen, and was told that no definite idea was entertained regarding the disposal of children purchased in infancy. Time would develop a market, or perhaps the tender ties of affection would bind with chords of love the little one and its adopted parent forever. In case a boy was ever sold to a Chinese nobleman, he explained, it would only result advantageously to the child, as no menial labor would ever be expected of him, and perhaps he would be allowed to marry into the family and inherit all the greatness of his purchaser. Another merchant pointed out a house where he stated a Chinawoman lived who was raising a white child; but upon application the woman refused to exhibit the little one, doubtless fearing that her pet would be taken away. On Washington street, near Stockton, a little yellow-haired boy, about seven years of age, came singing out of a butcher shop, carrying a parcel of meat. The Chinamen on the sidewalk joked with him, and he answered pertly in the Chinese language. He turned into a hallway and ran up stairs, followed by the writer, but the boy was lost to view in the intricacies of the house, which contained five hundred or a thousand Chinese lodgers. A girl about 10 years old, perfectly white and with Caucasian features, was next discovered carrying a heavy load of newly made overalls down Commercial street. An attempt was made to interview her, but uttering a series of calls in the Chinese dialect, she ran swiftly away from what she doubtless considered a white barbarian.

TRUE GREATNESS.

The world worships greatness. Success, when much above that commonly attained, makes him who achieves it an object of popular adoration. The nature of the action has but little to do with the excitement of popular applause. The public voice has been raised oftener and louder in praise of those whose chief delight appeared to be the destruction of human beings, than in that of the men whose whole lives have been devoted to the service of their fellow creatures. The names of Alexander, Cæsar and Napoleon, those "splendid curses of mankind," are better known than the names of those who have done most for the enlightenment and civilization of humanity. Next Sunday week, October 26th, will be the one hundred birthday of one who still lives, and who has spent nearly all of that long period in doing good to others. No tears but those of joy or gratitude have ever been caused by the actions of this truly great man. To no creed or country have his charities been limited—and still, with the weight of nearly one hundred years upon him, his mind is full of ideas for the good of his fellow creatures. So noble a life as this will entitle him who has lived it to be called "great;" and with the juster ideas of greatness, and the more humane spirit now so happily spreading over the world, the name of Sir Moses Montefiore is held in the highest esteem. The interest in the hundred birthday of this good man will not be confined to Judaism; Christendom will gladly pay its homage of respect and admiration to a man who has shed a glory on the venerable religion from which it sprang. Goodness belongs exclusively to no race or faith, and Moses Montefiore, the good and merciful man, will be held in deserved reverence.

Phylloxera.

A report of experiments and observations on the phylloxera pest, made at the State University, concludes as follows:

Several practically important conclusions result from the above observations. It appears that the light summer rains of the season have favored to an extraordinary degree the development and activity of the pest, especially of its winged form, most dangerous as the carrier of infection; and that this form was developed through the months of July, August and September and a part of October, while the numbers and activity of the larvæ in ascending through and diffusing themselves over the soil, was greatest toward the end of August. Any measures to prevent the spread of the insect during the season should, therefore, be taken prior to August, at least.

It is also shown how readily the young insect will ascend through the soil from superficial rootlets, and will attach themselves to any object lying in their way, so that infection may be carried readily from one vineyard to another by the mere passage of a wagon, plow, or other implement, as well as through fruit boxes, prunings and cuttings. Especially are the eggs of the winged form liable to be thus carried, even by gusts of wind upon leaves, etc. The gall-louse form, now also recognized here, adds danger to this vehicle.

Finally it is clearly shown that in ordinary soils no preventive used only around the stock of the vine can offer security against the ascent of either the winged or wingless form to the surface from outlying shallow rootlets, from which they can freely migrate to other uninfected stocks; and that, therefore, the utmost care alone can check the progress of the pest after it has once gained a footing. F. W. Morse.

Berkeley, Oct. 10, 1884.

Charles Mitchell, the English prize fighter, and Dominick McCaffirey of Pittsburg had a prize fight in Madison Square Garden, New York, last Monday night. A crowd of 6000 people assembled to witness the fight. Each scaled 165 pounds, Mitchell is twenty-three years old and stands five feet and eight and a half inches high. McCaffrey is twenty-one years old and is five feet nine and a half inches high. The men were both very game, and fought with great determination; not a little bitter feeling was shown on both sides. Mitchell delivered his blows, when he could, on McCaffrey's body; the latter made the former stagger with some terrible thumps on the face and side of the head. From the start McCaffrey appeared to be least affected by the punishment, he preserved his temper, while Mitchell got angry. The victory was finaly awarded to the Pittsburg boy, with a Mac to his name.

Has anything yet been done toward settling the muddle in the nomination of a Republican candidate for the Assembly? No one in Inyo County appears to know any thing about the matter. Candidates are now rushing around like ants in a state of commotion. The ants, however, are buisy in the interest of the community, that is one of the principal distinctions between the ants and the candidates.

A Georgia gentleman, he must have been a gentleman, was shot and killed lately by another Georgia gentleman. The lamented gentleman is described as being six feet tall, well proportioned, and when in good humor, of an agreeable disposition. He must have been of "an agreeable disposition" he claimed the proud distinction of having killed fourteen men himself.

WHAT IT MEANS.

By far the most important fact in connection with the Ohio election, is the proof it affords that a large majority of the people care far more about the protection of American industry than about mere party distinctions. Ohio has very large manufacturing interests, and where such is the case protection is not a mere theory, but a vital fact, for on the success of such interests the people are dependent for their daily bread. The workers know that if duties upon foreign goods are reduced below a certain rate, the establishments where they are employed will have to stop, and their children and themselves will not have the means to buy their daily bread; they also know of but one instance where ravens brought food to the hungry, but that was so long ago that it affords but slight assurance as a means of support. This political contest in Ohio was made distinctively on the question of protection; it was on that issue that the people were asked to decide, they have answered and it is not possible to mistake their meaning. What effect this result in Ohio may have on the Presidential election is of comparatively little consequence; Presidents now have but little influence upon legislation; in truth, the election of a Congressman may be of more real importance than the election of a President;. Very many who have different party affiliations agree fully on the wisdom and necessity of protection for home industry, and the same men who deemed it a sacred duty to help defeat such a rabid free trader as Frank Hurd, may think themselves not less bound by duty to vote for Mr. Cleveland for President. The spread of manufacturing industries over more States is surely spreading the interest in, and need of, home protection, and it is certain that a time will come when no man can be elected a legislator who is not an open and trusted friend to American manufactures, and who would not be willing, if need were, to exclude every article of foreign manufacture from our own markets, if by so doing the production of a similar article could be promoted at home. When such wise and pure men as William D. Kelley and Samuel J. Randall, men who differ so widely in party affiliations, agree so fully on the need of protection for the laborers of our own country, it is certain that the mass of the people will soon share the same convictions. These good men are prompted to action by knowledge, and the spread of knowledge will increase the numbers of those who share their convictions.

The President has appointed Frank Hatton Postmaster-General.

Senator Morrill has been re-elected to the United States Senate from Vermont.

The Chronicle says: It is intended by a syndicate of Eastern capitalists to soon place 25,000 acres of land in this State under cultivation for the production of sugar-cane and sorghum, as it is claimed the climate and soil are well adapted to this purpose.

A fire at Eureka, Nevada, last Monday, destroyed a large livery stable occupied by Thomas Trainor and owned by Frank Abadie. The building was insured for $1200. Trainor's loss in horses and livery vehicles is $4500; insured for $2000. In the debris appeared the roasted bodies of nine horses. The origin of the fire is unknown.

In the Bureau of Labor Statistics a table has been prepared from which it appears that the rate of wages at present paid to the various mechanics who are employed in the State is not sufficiently large to induce any additional immigration to California. The average rate paid for mechanical work through all classes will hardly exceed $2 50 a day, and very few employes enjoy the desired eight hour limit, nearly all workmen being required to put in at least nine hours, and many exceeding even ten. A table has been compiled which shows that the cost of the actual necessaries of life in San Francisco is far below the prices in other States of the Union and in Great Britain, and this fact serves to neutralize the apparent discrepancies which exist in the rates of wages in this country.

The Republican platform in Storey county, Nevada, pledges the legislative nominees to support various measures, some of which are as follows: To limit the term of the ensuing legislature to a period not exceeding forty days; to reduce the number of members of the Legislature; to reduce the salaries of State officers; to consolidate the offices of Clerk of the Supreme Court and State Librarian, and also those of the State School Superintendent and Principal of the State University; a reduction of at least one-half in the number of officers and attaches of the Legislature; to abolish the office of Adjutant-General; to abolish deputyships in every office where it is possible for the elected officers to perform the duties unassisted; to support any reasonable measure for the consolidation of Storey, Lyon, Ormsby and Douglas counties.

Several of the candidates for office in San Francisco, of both political parties, are so objectionable on the score of character, that an independent meeting has been held, and men of tried capacity and integrity have been selected as candidates for the several city offices. A part of the platform adopted by the meeting says;

"The crying evil, indeed the curse of official life, is the temtation offered to men, hitherto honest, but unused to the custody of large sums of money, to become dishonest, and the law's delays in the punishment of criminals, and their frequent escape, even after detected in the stealing of large sumes of public money, give additional force to the temptation, while the example set by men high in place who have grown rich by the plunder of office, and whom the world and society look upon as kindly and respectfully as upon the honest God-fearing citizen, obliterating the sharp line of distinction between vice and virtue, making the former less ugly and the latter undesirable is the prolific source of deep and universal demoralization."

We propose to scrutinize most closely and fearlessly the character of our nominees, and select such men whose career for years in the eyes of the community presents such a spectacle of life and conduct beyond reproach and beyond criticism as would be proof against any and all temptation.

The Panama Canal Company has signed a contract with a New York dredging company for the cutting of the last section of the canal. This contract provides that the work shall be finished in 1887.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.:
SATURDAY, OCTOBER 18,.....1884

INCREASE.—A good deal of work is already done on the Great Register, enough to show that there is a large increase in the voting population over the last registration.

BULLION SHIPMENT.—Mr. M. G. Nixon came in from Beveridge last Thursday with a shipment of gold bullion. Mr. Nixon reports the mine looking quite favorable.

REDUCED FARE.—On the arrival of all trains at Independence station, comfortable conveyance and good horses are in attendance to carry passengers to any part of town for fifty cents each.
H. LEVY, Stage Proprietor.

JURY.—Last Monday seventy-five names were drawn from which to select a jury for the trial of the Silva case. The parties whose names have been called will have to be in attendance at Independence, November 10th.

POLITICAL SPEAKING.—Mr. T. J. Goodale will make speeches on the political issues of the time, as follows: Lone Pine to-day; Bishop Creek next Friday; Big Pine a week from next Wednesday and at Independence on Saturday before election day.

THE MOST DANGEROUS.—By far the most dangerous animal is a fool. The Virginia Chronicle says: "During the Democratic meeting at Cooper's Hall on Saturday night some malicious person carried a couple of cigar boxes in the gallery, and by crushing them with his feet nearly caused a stampede. Had he been found he would have been sent on a flying trip over the banister of the front stairs, head first." It is a pity he was not found.

TESTING ITS ORES.—The Candelaria True Fissure of last Saturday says: Two carloads of ore were shipped by the Mount Diablo Company on Sunday morning to Hawthorne. From there the ores was loaded and conveyed by wagons to the Mount Cory reduction works. The Mount Diablo Company has the building of a new mill at Soda Springs in contemplation, and is making a test of the process employed at the reduction works named.

THINK THEY HAVE IT.—The Bodie Free Press of last Friday says: The New Standard, which recently opened up a vast body of exceedingly rich ore, bears every proof that they are simply on the northwest end of the Fortuna lode. In the upper levels of the "Old Reliable," the Standard, millions were taken from this same lode. Its course now is pretty well established, and any mine in the district that owns ground within this charmed boundary may consider it a paying proposition by simply taking the right direction, without making the fatal error of sinking until it is known what to sink on.

MORE THROAT CUTTING.—Last Sunday night an Indian who lives out near the Fort had his throat cut. This Indian and another one had been drinking and got into a quarrel, in the struggle that ensued one of the two used a knife, and tried to cut the head off his antagonist. The wound is so deep that what the man tries to swallow comes out of the opening, yet he is still living. There is another deep wound in the side of the injured man. No interference has been made in the case by the law officerers, so here is a chance for the deputy Sheriff and Counstable at Bishop Creek to get even.

PITIABLE PLIGHT.—A citizen of Darwin got into a pitiable plight a few days ago; he was attacked by two candidates. The unfortunate man was backed up into a corner from which there was no escape, and while one of the heartless wretches kept up an incessant stream of talk, the other, regardless of the imploring looks of the victium, aided in holding him up to the torture. Nature at last sank under the dreadful infliction, and the poor creature escaped from his tormentors by sinking into insensibility. Part of the torture consisted in making the poor fellow smile, and this cruelty may be safely considered as the principal cause of his final collapse.

NEVADA NOMINATIONS.—The Republicans in Storey county, Nevada, have made the following nominations: For State Senators, D. B. Lyman and E. D. Boyle; Assemblymen, B. Armbrust, John Young, Charles Harper, J. P. Flanningham, John D. Reese, George L. Hawkes, John L. Hanns, Wm. McMillan, N. G. Andrews, James Langan; Sheriff, James Orr; County Clerk, Charles Rawson; Treasurer, A. J. McDonnell; Assessor, George Henning; Recorder, John Ross; District Attorney, James A. Stephens; Public Administrator, A. B. Stoddard; Superintendent of Schools, J. W. Whitcher; Surveyor, David Crosby; County Commissioners, Frank W. Folsom, long term, and Captain D. A. Fraser, short term.

STRUCK BY LIGHTNING.—A flash of lightning hit the wrong object—a boy was injured, a brute escaped. The Los Angeles Express says: "Thursday afternoon at about 3:30 o'clock, on the Mitchell ranch, San Fernando valley, lightning struck a grape vine, near which were a boy and two men. The lad was standing about fifteen feet from the vine and the men were stationed about forty feet away. The men were so stunned by the electric shock that they did not regain consciousness for about five minutes, and the boy was paralyzed for three hours. When he recovered he said he felt as though all the bones on one side of his body were crushed. It was the desire to have the boy removed to a place where medical aid could be procured, but the heartless Mitchell, it is said, refused to allow his team to be used."

Property Transfers.

The following transfers of property have been entered upon the record, viz:

Bernardo Arambula to L. Lasky and A. Morana—Lachard mine, Beveridge district; consideration, $1.

J. H. Martin to R. W. Ford, one hundred inches of water in the Hughes and Edson ditch, Bishop Creek; consideration $100.

Thomas Crough to Peter Foisy, one-third interest in the Victoria mine, Union district; consideration $5.

J. H. Stoutenborough, Jr., to Stewart Fraser, lot No. 6, block J, Bishop Station; consideration $100.

Stewart Fraser to John Forbes, same property; consideration $300.

A. McKellips to J. R. Eldred, 750 feet in the Esperanza mine, Union district; consideration $50.

O. M. Paris to White & Anthony, town lot in Darwin; consideration $400.

Virginia Items.

The Territorial Enterprise says:

During his short stay on the Comstock, John W. Mackey not only visited and examined the watermills on the Carson river, but also went through the lower levels and inspected all points where work of any interest is in progress. He not only went through the north end and old bonanza mines, but visited the Hale and Norcross, inspecting the vein on the 2800 level. He expressed himself as being well pleased with the prospect on that level.

George Steen, formerly of this city, and who, with his son, was engaged in hauling wood, at the Union Mill, near Truckee, fell from his wagon last Friday and was instantly killed. His body was taken to Truckee, where an inquest was held and a verdict was rendered in accordance with the above statement.

As it has been decided to sink the sump of the Combination shaft to a depth of 50 feet below the 3000 level, it will be several days yet before that work will be completed.

Some years ago Mr. Cassidy, editor of the Eureka Sentinel, published a statement that platforms were only made to catch votes. He having been twitted many times on the statement, and lately by the Carson Appeal, George replied: "I'm afraid I overstated the matter of platforms catching votes; on the whole I guess they don't catch many, as so few people read 'em. Why, two years ago the Belmont Courier published both the Republican and Democratic platforms side by side, and when the foreman made up the paper he got the heads transposed, Republican head on the Democratic platform, and vice versa. The thing stood that way during the whole campaign, and nobody dropped on it outside of the editor, who thought it was too good a joke to spoil."

SALE POSTPONED.—The Sheriff's sale of the property of the Inyo Consolidated M. & M. Co. is postponed till Tuesday next.

FOR OFFICE.—We note by the Calico Print of late date that Joe Le Cyr and H. T. Walker, both former and very well known residents of Inyo, are in the political field in San Bernardino, both running for the high position of Constable, at Calico.

AFTER LAND THIEVES.—Acting Commissioner L. Harrison of the General Land Office at Washington has written to the Registers and Receivers of the various Land Offices, instructing them to obtain and forward to the Department all the information they can collect with regard to the illegal possession of Government lands in their districts, by either foreigners or Americans, together with the names of the persons, corporations, etc., so occupying or holding the same; also by what methods and to what extent the land and water supply are controlled in the grazing regions. Persons possessing this information should communicate with the Registers and Receivers.

KILLED BY A PIUTE.—News was received at Eureka, Nevada, last Friday, that a man named "Doc" Clay had been killed by a Piute about sixty miles south of Taylor. A year ago, "Doc" Clay, Bill Thomas and Dan Cornell went to Lincoln county to jump a ranch belonging to some Indians. They had a fight and Cornell was shot and killed. Bill Thomas was killed in a saloon brawl at Bristol last January. Last Tuesday "Doc" Clay was on his way to Osceola, and while walking beside his wagon uphill, the Indian shot from behind a tree and killed him. Deputy Sheriff Lyons of Taylor arrested the Indian and he is now in the County Jail at Hamilton. When arrested, the Indian said: "Me shoot Doc. Clay and horse; may be so me shoot him wagon too."

ANGORA GOATS.—Horace Bellows has over two thousand Angora goats at his place at Olancha. He began a few years ago with twenty-five females, and his flock increased rapidly from the start. The flesh is preferred to mutton, and is as highly valued as the best venison. Mr. Bellows sells a great many animals for butchering; he estimates that the number sold since he first went into the business is fully equal to the entire number of his stock at present. Wethers of three years old and upward average about sixty pounds per carcase, dressed. The goats are hardier than sheep, and do not require moving from place to place. This flock has never been moved from the present pasture ground. They increase much more rapidly than sheep, twins being nearly a uniform production, and the young kids are much less trouble to take care of than lambs. It is the experience of Mr. Bellows that the fleece improves greatly among his flock in length of fiber and fineness. There is no manufactory on the Pacific Coast for working the wool; it must be shipped east. A friend of Mr. Bellows, who also has a flock of goats, shipped a lot of wool to Philadelphia, for which he was paid seventy-five cents per pound. If an establishment were started in this State for the manufacture of the wool, no doubt there would be an immense increase in the number of goats.

Big Pine Correspondence.

BIG PINE, Oct. 16th.

Politics boil and bubble, throwing off vapors characteristic of every candidate in the political pot, and still Big Pine survives. Ye knights of the buttonhole have given our town a fair canvass. Young voters are somewhat lacking in political interest on account of none of their number being represented on either county ticket. The old politicians should give the young fledgelings a chance to learn the tricks of the trade, practiced by our fathers.—Outside of politics there is life in our old town yet. The lovers of the "hop" met at Hartshorns' on Friday evening last and enjoyed themselves, until old Dawn sneaked around, in that disgusting way of his that makes people feel "kind of ashamed of themselves," and intimated like a stern parent,—(of the girl)—that "it was getting late." All enjoyed the occasion—yes, and the supper too, for the latter may be depended upon at Hartshorns'. Although our young people have bestowed a liberal patronage on Bishop Creek on such occasions, our sister town did not reciprocate, for some reason. There were more persons present than could dance at one time, and we had an enjoyable time.

ABOUT TOWN.

J. W. McMurry returned from San Francisco yesterday, having been gone several days. Mac. brought with him and instituted a new game called "Cold Turkey."....Sheriff Gregg was in town yesterday gathering jury material... Harry Hartshorn is around again, looking fine as ever, since his return from the "Hub." The Mrs. H. did not appear as many expected. He reports many changes in old "Bosting" during the last ten years....J. L. Bray is in from Deep Springs, and is still enthusiastic over the mining interests of this county... Mr. T. G. Beasley was thrown from his wagon this week, and was quite seriously injured. Dr. George was summoned, and reports a hopeful prospect of complete recovery.

More anon. WADE.

New York Fashions.

The meaning of frise is frizzled, and frizzled this winter we shall be. Cloaks are no exception, and already I know of one too plump little lady preparing to make herself considerably plumper by the purchase of a frise or frizzled cloak. A yet more unlucky choice, when we remember that cloaks are still veritable cloaks and cover one from head to foot. Without doubt, too we shall see ladies of the bean pole order set out in smoth broadcloth cloaks which add nothing where addition would be a benediction. The reflecting soul reflects sadly, and wonders when people will learn the proprieties. Between the two extremes come cloaks of rough cloth or of plain combined with either rough or frise cloth, while special distinction is given by handsome shades of prune, reddish brown, stone, gray blue, or dahlia; black cloth being scarcely seen except for morning. Richer cloaks are entirely of rep, brocade, velvet or satin or with two or more in combination, while frise, silk or velvet is used as a trimming or component part. Cloaks are long, but not long are all cloaks, and they grow gradually less till they border on the domain of dolmans, where sovereignty is divided with dolmans and mantailas, and here the same materials and combinations are in favor.

MILLINERY.

Not only shall we be frizzied, but embroidered as well. In millinery especially is the flame of desire at white heat, and consumed in glory will be the admired One who shall attain a seventy dollar crown. From thence down to specimens within the average wearer's means. These handiworks of to-day are finished for the most part by those featured patchworks which have been mentioned, where oddities are not at all odd this season, but common enough. Such as a pair of bird's feet extending from patched up breasts, or four or five dyed chicken feathers erect from similar foundations. Such styles are visible at our most refined milliners, and are apt quotations of the general market. Frise effects come in as notable adjuncts. Both ribbons and materials so characterized, giving a style peculiarly their own, or matching frise ideas in dress goods where frise combinations will be marked features.

COSTUMES

are embroidered and frised to match. Plain tailor finished broadcloth suits have, it is true, a style of their own, but the wearers of them will be in a minority, and combinations of velvet, silk or satin, with flourishings of lace, chenille, fringe, or passementerie, are the foundations from which arise a greater number of costumes, also worn for driving, visiting, small gatherings, etc. The prominence of velvet or the fine qualities of Nonpareil velveteen is very apparent, the latter being in unprecedented demand, owing to its richness of pile and the fact that it is also extremely popular.

OCTOBER NOTES.

Accordion plaiting are genuine novelties where portions of dress pattern are pressed by machinery into folds that open out at pleasure.——Changeable hosiery is a stylish novelty, but not more so than a bronze silk stockings with slipper to match.——Satin, ottoman silk or uncut velvet are used for wedding dresses, often with brocade, frise stuffs or frise figured fabrics in combination. Artificial flowers are much used with plain fabrics for evening and are once more fashionable in the hair. LUCY CARTER.

Here and There.

—Mr. Barrows is moving his cattle from Long Valley to his ranch at the Fort.

—Mr. Broder has moved most of his stock to Fish Springs, where he has bought hay, and will winter them there.

—A couple of young gents in town went out visiting a few evenings ago. On the way they interviewed an "essence peddler," and when they arrived at their destination a young lady exclaimed, "Oh, my! you have got a new kind of cigarettes, haven't you?"

BORN.

COBB—At Dayton, Nev., Wednesday, October 15, 1884, to Mr. and Mrs. W. H. M. Cobb, a daughter.

MASONIC GRAND LODGE.—The Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons of California convened in annual session in the Masonic Temple, San Francisco, last Tuesday, Grand Master Jonathan D. Hines presiding. All the Grand officers were present except Grand Secretary Abell, who was absent on account of death in his family. His place was taken by Assistant Grand Secretary Grimes. Nearly 700 delegates were present, representing almost every lodge in the State. In the morning after the opening exercises nothing was done except the appointment of a Committee on Credentials. In the afternoon the annual address of Grand Master Hines and the reports of Grand Secretary Alexander G. Abell, Grand Treasurer Moses Heller, and Grand Lecturer John W. Shaeffer, were received, and were placed in the hands of appropriate committees. From the reports it appears that during the year Masonry has flourished in the State, the membership of the subordinate lodges now numbering 14,000.

THE HOG OF HATE.

A Conrageous Brute That Would "Bite" at the Zigzag Flashes of Death-Dealing Lightning.

[Cor. Detroit Free Press.]

Texas has within her borders a beast into whose narrow skull fear never enters. It is the peccary—the Havilinah of the Mexicans, the Dicotyles torquatus of zoologists. Bravery is a notable attribute of man, and it is discovered in birds, beasts, and fishes. I don't claim the quality for the brute I am about to describe. I believe bravery cannot be said to exist in senses devoid of fear. I conceive that an appreciation of danger is a necessary menstruum to nobler courage. It is not the man of dogged indifference I admire; it is the man who refuses to fly when duty bids him stand, and though he fears death, fears dishonor more.

Now the peccary has no particle of fear on account of any show of odds, and appears to live only for the purpose of madly dying when opportunity offers. The game cock fights with heroic valor, but one sees in his swimming eyes, when gaffed and bleeding in the pit, glances of regret and nameless fear. He shudders out his life beneath his crowing conqueror, and his tiny heart, perhaps, swells with woe at its last throbs. At least he looks that way to me. The dying pachyderm of the Texas forest dies in "a matter of course" manner, as if he were meant to end that way and was glad of it. He looks up in the tree where the man sits who shot him (few men of experience ever shoot them from any other stand-point) and anon he holds up his cloven hoof and glances at it. If the peccary regrets anything in the hour of dissolution it is that he was not made like a squirrel—to climb.

Roaming the glade, searching for mast, a drove of peccaries resemble a drove of tame hogs. They never begin a war, but when one is assailed the entire drove rush to the attack as men rush when martial valor urges them. Each beadlike eye is a fire-spark; tusks are protruded, the echinated spine straightened, and woe to the wretch who falls in their path. Gored, bitten, torn, trampled upon, and eaten up, to the last shred of his clothing—such is the fate of the man caught by a drove of angry peccaries. With the same fury they assail a wolf or attack a bull; and neither the wolf nor the bull can stand up against a charge of half a dozen peccaries. Both know this and fly in terror from the field.

Lately, on the Wichita River, I attacked a drove of peccaries. I was safely perched in a tree, armed with a Winchester rifle and accompanied by Sergeant Platt, of the Frontier battalion, who occupied a bough beneath me.

We waited until the drove approached within thirty yards of our tree and then we fired simultaneously, killing one and wounding another. The roar of our carbines brought them upon us with that strange alacrity, that suggested their having waited from sucklings for just that occasion and kept perfectly ready for it. When they arrived at the tree they bit it each in turn, and then glancing up, squatted and fixed upon us a dozen pair of eyes small as peas and blazing with fierce purpose and fury intense.

One by one we shot them, and they fell, one by one, and died; each willing and ready to go, and accepting his fate as pleasantly as school boys accept apples. Not a groan or a squeal betrayed pain or dismay. Squatting on their hams they gazed at us and took the bullets as if we were tossing them acorns. Presently only one was left alive and a dozen corpses, and there he sat, brown, bristling, furious, foaming with raging life, courting death; unmindful of the blood that damped the grass about him; indifferent of the fate of comrades—a very epitome of hate.

"Don't shoot yet!" I said to Sergeant Platt, "I want to study him."

Grim, voiceless, horrible—the hog sat and gave me back glance for glance. The spot he squatted upon was within the radius of a red ant bed. The insects crawled over him and stung his thick hide; they wasted their formic acid, blunted their lancets in vain. As well might they have stung the cactus plant growing beside their bed. After a time the old boar grew weary of gazing and he got up and went round, smelling the bodies of his late companions. Then he ate a few acorns that had fallen from the tree we were perched in, and after that he deliberately stretched himself at the root of the tree, intending to remain a sentry and prevent our slipping away without his permission; or without doing by him as we had done by the others.

We did not keep him waiting much longer. Platt aimed at his heart and pierced it with a forty-four caliber bullet; with a single glance upward from a sinister eye, the hog died gently, and with his life ended his one emotion—hate.

Texas & Pacific and Fort Worth & Denver City locomotive engineers often encounter droves of peccaries, as I suppose do all engineers who operate on the western Texas railroads. No whistle is sounded to frighten them. The engineers know that the peccaries cannot be frightened. The engine rushes into the midst of the drove and those not killed outright die madly, charging and biting at the wheels that crush them.

A peccary is in all respects a hog. He looks, smells, tastes like a hog—and is a hog, but for a thing of indomitable courage of the lower type, for a hater of quenchless fury, and for a fighter to the last throb of his heart, commend me to the fierce Dicotyles torquatus, the indigenous Texas hog, a brute that would, if he could, while riding in the midst of a cyclone, bite at the zig-zag flashes of the death-dealing lightning.

New Way of Curing Pork.

A Harrisonburg, La., man has discovered a new and very effectual way of curing pork. By some means he lost a portion of a slaughtered hog in a stream of water that runs hard by his place, and passing that way again a few days ago he found the meat petrified. Pork preserved in this way can be warrented free from trichinæ and will keep even in a German climate. The Harrisonburg hog is to be on exhibition at the New Orleans exposition, and it is believed that petrified pork will commend itself to the favorable notice of hotel and boarding-house keepers.—Exchange.

THE FARMER'S WIFE.

The farmer came in from the field one day,
His languid step and his weary way,
His bended brow and sinewy hand,
All showing his work for the good of the land;
For he sows,
And he hoes,
And he mows,
All for the good of the land.

By the kitchen fire stood his patient wife,
Light of his home and joy of his life,
With face all aglow and busy hand,
Preparing the meal for her husband's band;
For she must bake,
And she must brew,
And she must toil,
All for the sake of the home.

Sun shines bright when the farmer goes out,
Birds sing sweet songs, lambs frisk about,
The brook babbles softly in the glen,
While he works bravely for the good of the men.
For he sows,
And he hoes,
And he mows,
All for the good of the land.

How briskly the wife steps about within—
The dishes to wash and the milk to skim,
The fire goes out and the flies buzz about
For dear ones at home her heart is kept stout;
There are pies to make,
There is bread to bake,
And steps to take,
All for the sake of the home.

When the day is o'er and the evening has come,
The creatures are fed and the milking is done,
He takes his rest 'neath the old shade tree,
From the labor of the hand his thoughts are free;
Though he sows,
And he hoes,
And he mows,
He rests from the work of the land.

But the faithful wife, from sun to sun,
Takes the current up that's never done;
There is no rest, there is no pay,
For the housekeeper good she must work away;
For to mend the frock,
And to knit the sock,
And the cradle to rock,
All for the good of the home.

When autumn is here with chilling blast,
The farmer gathers his crop at last;
His barns are full, his fields are bare,
For the good of the land he ne'er hath care,
While it blows,
And it snows,
Till the winter goes,
He rests from the work of the land.

But the willing wife, till life's closing day,
Is the children's and the husband's stay;
From day to day she has done her best,
Until death alone can give her rest.
For after the test
Comes the rest,
With the blest,
In the farmer's heavenly home.

A Woman Without Home Duties.

A woman who has no home duties or who does not attend to such duties, is a pest to her acquaintances. It may take her a long time to make her breakfast toilet, but her outside garments go on like magic when she has once decided to make a morning or an afternoon call. She will not work, and she will not let her neighbors work. Her acquaintances are kept in a state of chronic discomfort in the expectation of a visit, and a door-bell in her vicinity cannot ring without striking terror to the heart of the lady of the house. A call from this idle person means simply loss of time without the slightest compensation. The work in the kitchen or the nursery must be abandoned, and this means, with practical, conscientious housekeepers, not only a giving up of the work for the time, but some time yet to come. The work planned for that day, and omitted for that day, means overwork at another time, confusion, and anxiety. What can be more exasperating than to be compelled to entertain an idle person to the neglect of necessary duties? It occasionally arouses all the antagonism and latent ugliness in one's nature. Hands and brain are all ready for the work which has been laid off for this time. "When will she go?" the spirit keeps asking. "If she will only go now I can rush through with the work, and the morning will not be a lost one." But she does not go. In fact, it is a rare thing for this particular kind of caller to take her leave until the utmost limit of time is reached, as well as the utmost limit of her hostess' patience. So, sensible ladies protect themselves by feeling at liberty to report that they are engaged when the idle woman thrusts her company upon people who do not admire her or her conversation.

A Most Amazing Paradox.

"Do you know, Miss Smithers," remarked young Featherly, "there is something very peculiar about your father?"

"Something peculiar about my papa?" repeated Miss Smithers, who loved Featherly passionately, but purely.

"Yes," that young man went on, "very peculiar."

"And what is it, pray?"

"It lies in the fact that though he is not a grandfather he has a grand daughter."—Drake's Travelers Magazine.

One Might Suppose.

A paragraph in a number of our exchanges says "Napoleon was bow-legged, Alexander Pope was hump-backed, Hannibal had notoriously big heels and was knock-kneed, Cicero was spindle-shanked, and Alexander's left leg was badly out of plumb." One might suppose that these old worthies were alive and running for political office.—Norristown Herald.

At the Round-Up.

Imagine a wide, long stretch of dreary plain—gray, barren, and unproductive; think of the bluest sky you ever saw, the brightest sunshine, and the most bracing air; imagine a great drove of restless, half-frightened, bellowing cattle, 5,000 in all—and then you have the scene of the round-up. It is not, however, perfect until the cow-boys make their appearance, dashing upon the scene on their high-mettled steeds, their dashing costumes and jaunty airs adding, in a great degree, to the charm of a round-up.

The definition of the term "round-up" is very simple. It means the gathering together of all the herds found running over a large territory, into one vast herd, when they are separated by a "cutting-out" process, each owner claiming his own, which he knows by the brand upon it. Every owner of cattle is present, in person or by proxy, to claim his stock. A day is appointed for the round-up, and due notice is given.

Many of the herds on Colorado ranges number thousands and thousands. During the grazing season they roam at will over the wide ranges, the cattle of one herd mixing with those of another.

The round-up occurs in the spring or early summer. The cow-boys, many in number, surround all the herds within a tract of territory that may be miles in extent. The herds are gradually rounded in by a circling process. The area of land over which they roam is gradually made smaller and smaller, until "the cattle on a thousand hills" are "rounded up" into one herd that often numbers 25,000 or 30,000 head.

Then the herd is "worked," as the cow-boys express it. Then the "fun" comes in, and the active, stirring, exciting part of the round-up commences—the part in which cow-boys glory most, the part that gives them an opportunity to display skillful horsemanship, and brings them up to the highest pitch of excitement. The favorite costume for cow-boys is a red flannel shirt, a wide slouch hat of white or yellow felt, a gay silk handkerchief around the neck, pantaloons, often of buckskin, thrust into riding-boots of great size. A belt around his waist contains the knives and pistol that give him the dashing air of a Spanish bandit.

He is a dashing, devil-may-care kind of a fellow, his good qualities too often hidden quite out of sight by tendencies toward evil that develop into great vices under the influences of the life he leads—a life calculated to develop even abnormal tendencies toward evil. His life is not so highly valued that he will not risk it lightly. He lives on the open plain. The sky above him is often his only roof. At best he lives in a tent or wagon, and is his own cook and laundress. His cow-boy companions afford him the only society he has for months at a time. When he goes to a city or village, he "takes in the town" in a manner that simply adds to his general reputation for wickedness. If he does not, in his mad desire, "take the town" itself, the inhabitants are thankful.

The calves that have accumulated among the herds are to be branded at the round-up; animals belonging on distant ranges are to be separated from the great herd and driven away; animals intended for market must go into a herd by themselves, and those whose lives are to be prolonged until another round-up, are sent scampering over the plains to roam where they will.

To do all this requires some exceedingly skillful and clever maneuvering on the part of the cow-boys. The loungers-on see some very clever bits of horsemanship on the part of the daring riders. At each round-up there is a foreman who directs everything pertaining to the round-up. His commands are, for the time being, absolute. He is obeyed as implicitly as a general at the head of his troops.

When all is in readiness, the foreman and his assistants ride slowly in among the restless, distrustful cattle. Every man singles out an animal bearing a particular brand, and begins the work of separating it from the herd, and driving it to one side. In five minutes all is confusion, shouts, and excitement. We wonder how the fearless riders move so swiftly in and out, here and there, everywhere, in the center of the herd, or dashing wildly around it, in swift, eager, fearless pursuit of refractory cows and bellowing steers. Once separated from the herd, the animal makes every effort to reach it again, and in preventing this, the cow-boy shows his own skill and the training of his horse.

Should an animal enter the herd after being driven out, the cow-boy dashes in after it. You see his red-shirted body swaying to and fro above the great mass of bristling horns. Should an animal prove too obstreperous, the cow-boy lassoes it, and fairly drags the resisting creature away, in spite of its bellowing, its kicking, and frantic efforts to regain its freedom. With a lasso around its horns, there is no escape.

It is hot, tiresome, exciting work, but the cow-boy revels in it. He likes it all the better if there should be a crowd of spectators to witness his skill and daring. There is something in the spirit and dash of the chase, the excitement and danger of it, that accords with his own restless, fiery, impatient nature. He looks eagerly forward to the coming of the round-up. It is to him the reward for long days and weeks of an uneventful life on the plains, while watching the quietly grazing herds. At the close of the round-up the cow-boys are likely to gallop off to the nearest town for a season of revelry.

Dodge City, Kansas, has long been a favorite city with the cow-boys. The world has heard of the result of some of their meetings there. To ride shouting and screaming through the streets of a town, firing pistols indiscriminately, and sending the frightened inhabitants behind locked doors and closed windows, is a freak suggested by a cow-boy's merriment.

Not all of the gentry of the plains are so ill-disposed. Many of them are manly, agreeable young fellows, making a beginning as cow-boy that will set them [illegible] or great herds and great fortunes. The raising of cattle is a sure road to fortune in the far West. I know of nothing in which small beginnings give such great returns. Many wealthy Western cattle-owners have commenced as cow-boys, on a salary of thirty-five or forty dollars per month, with board. It is surprising to know how quickly a little herd of ten or twelve cows will develop into a drove of cattle, without the outlay of a dollar for food or buildings. The severity of Western winters has proved fatal to many herds, but the watchful herdsman will never suffer a loss at all proportionate to his gains.

The stranger, riding by rail over the brown acres of the Western ranges, wonders that an animal can live at all upon the product of what seems like a dreary waste of barron soil; and yet the Colorado plains are the best grazing regions in America. There is probaby more grass on a single acre of land in the Eastern or Middle States, than in five acres of Colorado soil, and there is probably more nutriment in one bunch of Colorado grass than in a square foot of Eastern grass. The little brown tufts of grass on the Western ranges are very nutritious indeed. It cures as it dries on the ground, and retains its strength during the entire winter. Sheep and cattle live the entire year on the product of plains that can never be utilized for anything but grazing lands. There are thousands of acres that can never be irrigated for agricultural purposes. They are quite as valuable, however, for stock-growers.

Sheep thrive remarkably well on Colorado lands. Ten years ago there were not more than thirty thousand sheep where there are now nearly three millions. One man can herd twenty-five hundred sheep.

Young men with a little capital would find Colorado an excellent field for sheep raising. It would be advisable, however, for them to become familiar with the work by first spending a summer on some sheep ranch, of which there are hundreds in the State, and hundreds yet to be had.

Recent statistics have proved that the raising of cattle and sheep is one of the most remunerative of the Western industries, and one that is far more certain in its results than mining. If we could only know of the hundreds of poor fellows who fail in their eager pursuit of mineral wealth, we would better know how small the proportion of lucky or successful men is. We hear only of the Mackays, the Tabors, and the Fairs. The thousands who have failed have never been heard of.

In cattle and sheep raising the results can be pretty accurately relied upon if good and careful management be the rule of the day.

The occupation is healthful in the extreme. There is life and vigor in the air of the Western plains.

Billy's Girl.

A gentleman sat in a rear corner seat in a Broadway car on a Sunday evening, reading. He felt a hand on his shoulder as the car was turning into Clinton Place. Looking up he encountered the face of the conductor, a tall young fellow with soft blue eyes. The conductor coughed a little, inclined his head toward the gentleman's ear, smiled, blushed and stammeringly whispered:

"Would you—be—good enough to move forward a little? I—a—lady friend of mine is going to get on at the next corner—and—and I want to have a chance to talk with her."

The gentleman said, "Why, certainly," and went out on the front platform. As the car bowled into University Place, a handsome girl in black got on and sat down in the seat the gentleman had left. The conductor rang up a fare on the register for her. Then he retired to the rear platform, leaned in at the open window, and talked with her.

The driver turned around as the handsome girl got on, and looked at her admiringly. He then twirled his thumb significantly toward the rear platform, winked ponderously at the gentleman and said:

"That's Billy's gal. She gits on here every Sunday night. You see, Billy has sich long hours that he ain't got time to go sparkin' hisself, so the gal has to go sparkin' him. He's goin' to git married next month."

When the gentleman got off the car at Thirty-eighth Street, Billy and his sweetheart were still sparking.—New York Sun.

A Row in the House.

A foreign gentleman at a musical evening a few weeks since expressed a great wish to hear "Home, sweet Home," which he had been told was a striking example of a musical pathos and expression. A well-known professor of music, having been asked to play it, sat down to the piano and dashed into Thalberg's variations to the air, to which the foreign gentleman listened with deep attention, becoming, however, a little bewildered at the complicated passage to the finale. At the conclusion he rose and gravely shook hands with the professor, saying, "I thank you, sare. I think me understand now your 'Home, Sweet Home'—so nice and quiet to begin with, but, at the end, oh, what a row in the house."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Good Thing for the Morals.

Another great scientific fact has been promulgated. We are told that if a cannon ball was fired due west, and could maintain its initial velocity, it would beat the sun in its apparent journey around the earth. It is a good thing for the morals of the country that a cannon ball cannot maintain its initial velocity. The race would induce men to bet who never bet before.—Burlington Hawkeye.

NO WOOD, COAL OR OIL.

A Town Where Everything Is Run by Natural Gas.

"Our glass factory and our residences are heated and lighted by natural gas," said Capt. James B. Ford, the veteran plate-glass manufacturer, a few days ago to your correspondent at the Monongahela House, Pittsburg.

"Do you mean that the furnaces of your foundry and the grates of your houses consume only gas?"

"Yes. Not a pound of wood or coal is consumed at Creighton, where the Pittsburg Plate-Glass Company have their plant. Come out and I'll show you."

So to Creighton, twenty miles north of Pittsburg, on the Alleghany River, and on the "West Penn road," as the people style it, went your correspondent. And what saw he there? Answer, the model community of the age!

Captain Ford, whose rotund form was so familiar years ago in the cities about the falls, met me, and, without ceremony, escorted me through the town of Creighton.

I will use his explanation without quotation marks. Three years ago, believing that a natural flow of gas could be obtained in the valley of the Alleghany north of Pittsburg sufficient to serve the purposes of fuel and light for any manufactory, 200 acres were purchased and a well was sunk. A well defined coal vein was on the property, but coal was not wanted; gas was, and gas was struck at 1200 feet in a five-inch bore. A stream, a torrent of pure hydrogen gas, burst out with a force of 250 pounds to the square inch, and the establishment of plate-glass works on an economical basis became a fixed fact. Last November the Pittsburg Plate-Glass Company was organized.

What I saw is what I wish to speak about. No coal, no wood, no cinders, no ashes, no smoke (think of that), no debris of a factory to be seen anywhere. In the furnaces a lurid, steady heat, regulated like clock-work. Overhead in the vast works were gas-burners ablaze in the broad day, because as Captain Ford said, "It was not worth while to take time to turn the burners off and on, as there was plenty of gas and to spare."

All through this vast establishment, with its great whirling tables loaded with plate glass undergoing the several processes of polishing, was observable the supreme power of the five-inch pipe of natural gas. The great engine throbbed and moved in perfect regularity all the mechanism of the establishment, actuated by the same simple, natural power. No coal, no ashes, no cinders, no smoke!

"Come to the house and I'll show you how we get along without coal," said Captain Ford.

Wonderingly I followed. In a charming cottage residence of large capacity, with grate and gaslights in every room and hall, and in the kitchen stove even, were nothing but fringes of gas jets.

"Last winter, as cold as the winter was, we didn't know what cold was," said a lady in this delightful house.

Why should they? A thumbscrew on a gas-pipe regulated the temperature to absolute perfection. We live in a fast age. To primitive people, dependent upon coal and wood for heating purposes, whether we get it through cheap stoves, grates or costly furnaces, what a revelation this nature's gas company is. I am inclined to have a mighty poor opinion of our local gas companies, with their millions of capital, when I think of Captain Ford's five-inch pipe stuck in the ground, just beyond the town of Creighton, on the Alleghany River. Nature has quietly been pressed into the most practical and utilitarian method for man's profit and luxury. The only cloud that arises from this community is formed from steam.

"We don't need to use this steam at all," said Captain Ford. "The natural pressure of the gas, 350 pounds to the square inch, will drive our engines, and we can use the escaping gas just as well for fuel and light. They are doing it below us and we will soon adopt the same method."—Pittsburg Letter to Louisville Courier-Journal.

SODA WATER.

How the Stuff That Is so Called Is Compounded.

"Did you ever think how the soda water you drink with such relish is made?" queried an attendant of one of the fountains in an up town pharmacy to a reporter.

"Yes, but never found out. How is it made?"

"We start in by filling our generator with 14 gallons of water, 7½ gallons of marble dust, and 3¾ gallons of vitriol, pour the latter in carefully, as a too quick precipitation of that ticklish liquid would generate a pressure of gas sufficient to cause an explosion. From the generator a pipe leads to and connects with the cooler. On this is a gauge, and when it indicates a pressure of 185 pounds to the square inch, the cooler is connected with our fountain by rubber tubing and the gas is turned into the ten or twelve gallons of ice cold water that the fountain contains. Then it is ready to serve out to customers as deliciously cool Arctic soda water, flavored to taste and only costing ten cents a glass."

"Do you make your own flavoring?"

"Certainly. In our laboratory. We not only make our own flavoring, but also all our own mineral water. Just send in your order, and, no matter where the mineral spring is situated, in this country or in Europe, we will give you a bottle of it freshly made by our own chemist."

"What is the process called by which you make your soda water?"

"Well, it is the process that imitates the 'Matthew's process,' and is generally called by that name."

"And the only ingredients you use are?"

"Water, marble dust, and vitriol. These well shaken, generate the gas that gives the soda taste to the water in the fountain. That is all."—N. Y. Mail and Express.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.:
SATURDAY, OCTOBER 25, ...1884

SINCE the 1st of January the exports of silver have been in excess of gold, conclusively proving the falsity of the charge, so often made that the coinage of silver was driving gold out of the country.

A BILL has been introduced in the Vermont Legislature, that provides for the legal execution of criminals by electricity. The chief value of any punishment for crime is that it shall follow swift and sure upon the commission of the offense. The way in which a murderer shall be made incapable of doing more injury to his fellow creatures, is of less importance than that it shall be accomplished quickly after the murderous disposition has become manifest.

THE business of fruit canning has grown to enormous proportions. The average annual production is now estimated to be upward of five hundred millions of tins, or about ten for every man, woman and child in the United States. It has developed into a national industry which furnishes a much needed supply of anti-scorbutic food during the winter months, and in many localities preserved provisions have become a necessity.

LAST Thursday an attempt was made to wreck the train on which General Logan was traveling toward Peoria Illinois. At a point one mile west of Knoxville, while the train was running at the rate of forty miles an hour, and upon rounding a curve the engineer saw an obstruction on the track. He put on the brakes immediately, but did not succeed in bringing the train to a stand until the engine had run over two of the four ties which had been laid across the track. The news of the diabolical attempt on the life of General Logan and escort spread rapidly, and aroused the most intense indignation. From attempts to destroy character, to efforts at the destruction of life itself, the descent is not far nor hard to make.

None of the men wounded in the shooting affray at Lundy last Saturday are dead yet. More trouble is expected. The Bodie Free Press says: For the past two or three nights there has been a mysterious congregation of mounted and (it is supposed) armed men in Mill Creek Canyon below Lundy. Yesterday several persons prominent in Lundy received notice that their presence could be dispensed with after 24 hours had elapsed. Some so notified came into Bodie to-day. Others stayed in Lundy. Rumors as to what will be done by one party are off set by rumors of what the other party will not allow them to do. Nothing definite can be learned at this distance from the scene of action; but the opinion very generally prevails here that more blood will be shed in Mill Creek, and that pretty soon.

The Express says. "While little or no building is going on in San Francisco, Sacramento, Stockton and other cities in this State, Los Angeles marches on, and costly edifices are going up in all parts of the city. In the southwestern part of the city many beautiful private residences are in course of construction. Property is increasing in value and it will be an earlier date than 1887 when Los Angeles will contain 40,000 people. Everything points in that direction. The remark is often made, in order to be prosperous the city must have manufactories. These valuable adjuncts to a commercial center will come in time. Our growth in that direction will be slow; but the mill and machinery will be in our midst." The signs of prosperity in Los Angeles are interesting and encouraging to the whole of the Southern part of the State because as population and wealth increase there they will spread over all the neighboring counties.

A BABY show was one of the most attractive features of the District Fair at Los Angeles. There were twenty seven entries for the competetion, one pair of twins being among the number. The babies ranged from two to twenty months old. The Express says.

"The baby show might be said to have been the leading feature of the fair. One thing the reporter noticed most particularly was the fact that persons looking over the display of innocents were mighty careful not to express themselves in love with any particular one. It is understood that the directors of the fair have made the necessary arrangements whereby the committee who have the deciding as to the merits or demerits can leave the county in safety. The babies took up the attention of the visitors the best part of the afternoon. The exhibition was fine, and went to show that Los Angeles county can not only boast of the most beautiful women in the county, but also the prettiest babies."

From what the Los Angeles scribe writes about pretty babies and beautiful women it is evident he has never been in Owens valley.

WORTH PRESERVING.

The home market is worth more to the people of the United States than the markets of all the world beside. Foreign manufacturers understand fully the value of our market, and nothing would suit them so well as such a reduction of duties as would enable them to get their cheap labor productions placed in competition with our own manufactures. Mr. Morrison, chief of the Bureau of Statistics, has handed in his annual report to the Secretary of the Treasury. A casual glance at this report tends to dwarf the importance which is attached to our foreign commerce. The report shows that the value of the products of the varied industries of the United States is seven times the total value of our foreign commerce, including both imports and exports. The United States is now the largest manufacturing country on the globe. The value of American manufactured products consumed at home is five times the value of the manufactured products of Great Britain and Ireland exported to all other countries When the value of the home to the foreign market is compared, the latter almost disappears. It is absolutely insignificant. Ninety-nine per cent of the coal mined in the country, ninety-five per cent of our iron and steel products, ninety-five per cent of the products of our leather industry, more than ninety-nine per cent of our manufactures of wool, ninety-five per cent of the products of cotton manufactures, more than ninety-nine per cent of our manufactures of silk, and ninety-seven per cent of our manufactures of glass, glassware, earthenware and stoneware was consumed in the United States. The report shows a falling off in the total value of exports and imports for the year of $138,807,014. The value of domestic merchandise exported during the year amounted to $724,864,852, a falling off of $79,258,780 from the preceding year. The value of imports amounted to $667,697,693, or $55,483,221 less than the preceding year. The exports of specie amounted to $67,133,383; of imports of specie to $37,426,262, a difference of nearly $30,000,000 in our favor. A protective tariff tends to keep this immense market for the products of our own manufactures. It is not surprising, however, that so vast a market should be looked at with longing eyes by nations whose low standard of wages has reduced the value of their own home market.

LAST Thursday, near Carson, a young man employed on the Virginia and Truckee Railroad, named William Sprague, fell from the train and was cut to pieces.

THE STUMP.—The stump don't get time to get cold now a days, almost as quickly as one orator becomes exhausted—and there only do they stop—another one is ready to jump up, though it is almost certain that not a single vote is changed by all this talk. The fact is in many instances the audience is better informed than the orator, and while some people attend these meetings merely to show their party loyalty, others go because it is a free show and serves to pass an evening. It is reported from Lone Pine that Mr. Goodale had a fair attendance last Saturday to hear him speak. No report of his speech was made. Mr. Deal, Democratic candidate for the Assembly, was present at a meeting in Independence last Wednesday evening; he was accompanied by Mr. J. C. McTarnahan. Mr. Deal appears to be wholly incapable of addressing an audience, and made no effort to do so. He is not unintelligent however, and might make quite as good a legislator as a better talker. As a stump speaker Mr. McTarnahan has great power—of lungs. He speaks with great freedom—from all restraints of rules of logic or grammar, laws of political economy or facts of history. This enables Mr. McTarnahan to make his speech varied and picturesque far beyond the common run of such efforts. His audience is kept upon the broad grin most of the time; but whether they laugh with him or at him don't seem to give him much concern. Mr. Deal and his friend went from here to Lone Pine, and thence back to Big Pine and Bishop Creek, at each of which places meetings were held.

John Keating, father of Superintendent R. P. Keating, of the Hale and Norcross and Savage mines, died here last evening about 4 o'clock. Deceased was a native of Capa Moore, County Limerick, Ireland, aged seventy years. He came to the United States in 1824. He was by nature a pioneer, being fond of life in new and wild places. He was a pioneer in Ohio, Michigan, Kentucky and other Western States. In 1834 he assisted in clearing the ground on which the city of Cleveland, Ohio now stands. In 1842 he went down the Mississippi river to New Orleans, and returning thence settled at Memphis, Tennessee, in 1843. In 1850 he came to California across the plains, and arrived at Hangtown, now Placerville, stopped there for a time and engaged in mining. In 1852 he went to Weaverville, Trinity county California where he worked at mining. From 1860 to 1862 he was engaged in mining in Sierra county. He then went to San Francisco and resided in that city until 1875, when he came to the Comstock with his son R. P. Keating, and settled in Gold Hill. He remained on the Comstock from his arrival until the time of his death.—Enterprise.

Torrible Murder at Lundy.

Last Saturday night a terrible tragedy was enacted at Lundy, Mono county. It will be remembered that a few weeks ago a stage was stopped near Bodie, and a Chinawoman was carried off and robbed and held by the robber for ransom. The robber, was well known by the names Wilson, Killet, Tex and other aliases. It is alleged that certain officials in Bodie knew that such a robbery and kidnapping had been planned and that these officials were the constant associates of the parties who planned the crime. Wilson kept the Chinawoman prisoned in the mountains for sometime and no effort was made to arrest him or free her. At length the Sheriff of Mono appointed William Callahan a deputy, and the latter at once set about arresting Wilson. Callahan formerly lived in this valley and had the reputation of being a brave man. He went out to where Wilson was known to be and met him in the road. Wilson had a saddle horse and pack animal, and was trying to get away, having liberated the Chinawomen. Wilson had a rifle, Callahan had only a pistol, and before the latter could get near enough to use his weapon with effect, Wilson raised the rifle and held him at bay. Callahan let the robber pass, but soon afterward met two men whom he knew, and having told them of the situation they at once offered to aid him in capturing Wilson. The party soon came up with Wilson, who now left the road and took the bushes; he fired once, just missing Callahan, who, with his friends, made a dash for the robber. Wilson jumped into a thicket and dropped his rifle, this was picked up by one of the party and all started in hot persuit after the fugitive. After a run of five miles Wilson turned upon his pursuers and presented a pistol, but the rifle being brought to bear upon him he threw up his hands in token of surrender. He was taken to Lundy and placed in the lockup there. The rifle and one of two pistols Wilson had are reported to be identified as belonging to a officer in Bodie, and report farther says this person loaned the weapons to Wilson. Last Saturday William Jardine George Lee, and a liquor dealer in Bodie named Marks were all in Lundy; these are said to be friends of Wilson, and this business in Lundy was to favor his escape from confinement. One of the men who helped to arrest Wilson was Kirkus Steves; Jardine sought him and at once tried to get up a quarrel. Not many words were spoken when Jardine fired at Steves, getting in the first shot. As the latter was falling he returned the fire, shooting Jardine through the bowels. The wound of Steves was not regarded as serious, but for Jardine there was no hope of recovery. About the same time these events were going on, George Lee had sought out Callahan, and at once used insulting language to him. Callahan was sitting down and got upon his feet as he did so Marks, who was by, threw his arms about him in such a way as to hinder him from drawing his pistol. Lee moved a little on one side, that his bullet might not injure Marks, and fired. The ball entered Callahan's thigh, close to the body, and smashed the bone. The wound was believed to be surely mortal. Of course these terrible events created the wildest excitement in the town: Lee and Marks were at once arrested and placed in the lockup. It was beleived that should Calahan die in the course of the night, as was expected, Wilson, Marks and Lee would be lynched. Charges are openly made that county officers have been in league with lawless characters, that proper efforts have not been made to arrest offenders, and even when arrested the law has not been duly enforced against them. It is further said that from these causes expensive lawsuits, resulting in nothing, have been brought upon the county, to the great increase of taxation the disgrace of the county, and the serious hindrance of general prosperity. If these grave charges are true a little nerve upon the part of good citizens would quickly remove the causes of the trouble. Good citizens far out number rascals; the latter are successful in villany by being united. When respectable men unite against villains they are always successful. Let the good people of Mono try it.

Lundy Again Disappointed.

The Homer Mining Index says: Nothing further has been heard of the sale of May Lundy mine for the past two or three weeks, nor of or from the new company, and not a word about "starting up." It is now the general impression here that no sale has been made, and that the sale "racket" was was played upon the creditors in order to get a settlement at seventy cents on the dollar. It was Bay Queen and Detroit Copper over again. Pike ought to have first premium.

THE working people of England are in great distress, owing to depression in business. Mines, factories, foundries, shipyards, and manufacturing establishments of all kinds, are working only part of the time; many are stopped entirely. The people feel that free trade has brought them to this miserable condition, and are loudly and sternly asking for protection.

It would appear that Government officials are now disposed to carry out the intent of the restriction law. The Treasury Department has just decided an interesting question arising out of the Chinese Restriction Act. The Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions shipped at Canton two converted Chinese women, with the object of installing them as teachers in the Home Mission at San Francisco. Upon their arrival they found they were not provided with the certificates required by law, and the department was applied to for instructions. The Collector of Customs has been instructed not to permit them to land and to see that they are returned China.

AT the Standard Con. mine, Bodie, sixty-seven men are employed.

OFFICIAL returns from Ohio place the net Republican plurality on the Congressional vote at the last election at 19,518.

A CONSIDERABE amount of prospecting is still being done in various directions at points a few miles from this city. All "queer looking" streaks of rock in the country are being overhauled in a search for nickel, tin and similar metals. Some interesting, if not valuable discoveries, are liable to be made.

THE experiment of introducing the Hereford breed of cattle into Nevada bids fair to be a brilliant success. Russell and Bradley, Scott & Co., Sparks and Tinnin, and others have already considerable herds of them. They thrive and keep fat on the most ordinary pasturage, and seem to stand bad weather quite well. Mr. Polk, who is foreman of Scott & Co.'s Humboldt ranches, says he is obliged to diet them in order to prevent their getting too fat. He had to run a division fence through a field and turn them out on the sage brush benches. They still keep fat and in fine condition where common cattle would soon get thin.—Reno Gazette.

OLD VON MOLTKE.

Pen Picture of the Famous Prussian General and Strategist.

Moltke the Silent—der Schweiger—as he is called, is generally considered the greatest, and is certainly the most successful, of living soldiers. His achievements at Koniggratz, Sedan and Paris have never been surpassed and compel the admiration of all competent military critics. Silent, quiet, cold, the very incarnations of concentrated thought, just as you see him walking in the streets or moving in a drawing-room, when everybody stands respectfully aside to let him pass—so he stood on the battlefield, his cold, clear eye passing slowly from one point to the other, and his cold, clear mind weighing the chances of victory and defeat with the intensity and serenity of a mathematician pondering over the solution of some grave problem.

No one, it is said, has ever seen Count Moltke excited, not even at Sedan, where the greatest victory of modern times decided the fortunes of the two most powerful empires of the continent. His calmness seems mysterious, almost awful, and there is something strangely sad about the silent, lonely man. His wife died some years ago; he never had a child; his nearest relations, with the exception of a nephew and niece, seem to be kept at a distance by him. Who are his companions and friends? To whom does he ever talk in a friendly, familiar way? Nobody has ever been able to tell me, though I have often inquired.

An old man of eighty-four, he still appears without fail wherever duty calls him. He is to be seen at almost all the Emperor's receptions, the most striking personage near the throne. But how does the old Field Marshal pass the time when free from duty—when tired of work? Nobody pretends to know. Either nobody penetrates into his intimacy, or else those who approach him intimately do not speak about it.

When the weather is fine you may see a very tall, thin man with very light yellowish hair and a sallow, beardless, wrinkled face, out of which shine a pair of stony gray eyes, wrapped in a long, dark military coat, a cap on his small head, faultlessly dressed in a general's uniform—a gentleman born in every inch of his aristocratic, slender figure, his body still erect, but his head, as in deep thought, slightly bent forward—such a man, I say, you may see coming out of the great red building which stands on the Koenigs-Platz, at the corner of Moltke and Bismarck Streets, and which bears the name of "General Stab." The solitary old man, unattended by a servant, walks slowly, noiselessly. Every one who meets him looks at him attentively. If the passer-by is a soldier, he stands on one side and salutes. The old General returns the salute slowly and deliberately, but apparently without seeing to whom. Every time I see him the thought occurs to me that in such guise Dante must have passed through the streets of Florence. That is General Field Marshal, Count Hellmuth von Moltke, one of the strangest characters the world has ever produced. It is well worth going to Berlin to see that great historical personage.—Blackwood's Magazine.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.:
SATURDAY, OCTOBER 25,.....1884

SERVICES.—Rev. Warren Nims will hold services here to-morrow, it being his regular appointment.

REDUCED FARE.—On the arrival of all trains at Independence station, comfortable conveyance and good horses are in attendance to carry passengers to any part of town for fifty cents each.

H. LEVY, Stage Proprietor.

COMPLETED.—The printing of the Great Register is now completed, and copies will be mailed today to the more distant precincts. There is a large increase in the number of voters registered since the Great Register was printed in 1882.

COMPLIMENTS THE GOVERNOR.—The Carson Appeal compliments Governor Adams of Nevada in this fashion: In point of natural ability Jones has few superiors in the Senate, while in matter of brains and education Adams has few inferiors in the State."

BITTEN BY A HOG.—While trying to butcher a hog belonging to Mr. Henry Levy, Hotel keeper in Independence, Warren Fairchild was severely bitten on the hand. The wound was extremely painful; the hand and arm swelled up to a great size, and Fairchild suffered terribly for some days. He is now getting along all right.

A WELCOME SOUND.—The Candelaria True Fissure of last Saturday says: On last Monday morning the whistle at the Holmes Hoisting Works was blown for the first time in many months. Its screech was welcome, meaning the resumption of work through the shaft. The engine and other hoisting machinery have received a thorough overhauling and are now in a good state of repair.

WON'T IT PAY?—The Walker Lake Bulletin of last Saturday says: "Fletcher has 200 tons of hay piled up and covered at the Sweetwater ranch. He has already begun delivering it at Hawthorne at $25 per ton." If hay can be sold in Hawthorne for the price stated, our farmers might do well to investigate the matter, perhaps a market could be found there for Owens Valley hay.

AN UNLUCKY MINER.—There is a miner at Bodie who is very unfortunate. The Miner of Monday says: "Yesterday occurred to Gabe Mills the third accident in the Bodie mines, which have laid him up for weeks at a time. He has been working in the New Standard mine Levy. Yesterday a rock fell on one of his feet, cutting the second toe nearly off. Gabe was blown up once in the Syndicate, required seven months to recover from his injuries, during three months of which he was blind. Once a cave in the Standard laid him up a month."

VIRGINIA KEEPING PACE.—Virginia City won't be behind the fashion; she has developed an absconder. E. R. Smith, of the firm of Lunkey & Smith, large lumber dealers and real estate owners in that city, has been discovered to be short in his accounts to the extent of $30,000. Smith has been in charge of the company's mill and lumber interests during the past three years. About two months ago he left for San Francisco to attend to some financial matters for the firm, carrying with him blank checks on which he is reported to have realized a large amount of money. Since then nothing of him has been heard. He leaves behind at Truckee a wife and four children.

ODD FELLOWS.—The Grand Encampment met in San Francisco last Tuesday. There was a full quorum in attendance. Grand Scribe Lyon's report shows 67 encampments, 3875 members, an increase of 319; died during the year, 49; total receipts for year, $42,342 64; total paid for relief and charity, $18,334 87; total assets, $157,161 44. At the afternoon session the following officers were elected for the ensuing term: W. W. Lyman, Grand Patriarch; L. A. Simon, Grand High Priest; J. F. Crosset, Grand Senior Warden; A. K. Lund, Grand Junior Warden; C. H. Randall, Grand Representative; Trustees—Louis Sober, H. S. Winn, W. H. Barnes.

OF INTEREST TO BEE-KEEPERS.—At the Los Angeles Fair an article was shown that may prove of value to bee-keepers. The Express says: "W. W. Bliss, the well-known bee man of Duarte, has on exhibition at the Pavilion honey put up in small paper boxes suitable for shipping almost any distance. The comb is in a section, and the whole fits closely in the box. A good deal of honey is being shipped in this manner. The section and the paper box are made in Ohio. Why are not these two articles manufactured in Los Angeles county? Some enterprising man should look into this matter and see what can be done. There is money in the manufacture of these articles."

GRAPE LANDS.—During the last few years a very great increase has been made in the value of land around Santa Clara. This increase is mostly due to the planting of vineyards. A correspondent writing to the Chronicle says: It is only within the last few years that the section on which the great bulk of the vineyards are now planted was covered with chaparral, and no one ever dreamed that the cultivation of grapes was possible. The land was then worth from $10 to $25 per acre; it is now worth from $200 to $300 an acre—that is, the bare land, and where vines are planted it is worth from $500 to $1000 an acre. So eagerly has land been bought up that it is now almost an impossibility to buy any first-class vineyard land." It is already demonstrated that thousands of acres of land in Owens valley are well suited to grape culture, and beyond any doubt the value of land will increase here is it has done around Santa Clara.

Letter From Round Valley.

MR. EDITOR:—Threshing still goes on in this vicinity; however, both machines will soon "hang up" until 1885. Those threshermen deserve credit, having done good work during the season, thundering early and late—in fact, demolishing two suppers in one night—anxious to do a big day's work. Should these gallant fellows ever die, may they tumble into a heaven where no dust floats!

The Round Valley school is now in full blast, Miss Carrie Stoutenborough being teacher. The big boys, such as Gus. McGovern, Hank Gregory, Al Bowman, Goodridge and others are "awful glad" that threshing is nearly over; they want to go to school—a commendable disposition in young boys; may they "larn suthin."

Jesting aside, we bespeak a successful term for Miss Stoutenborough. Teachers never yet have had any trouble here, the children, like their parents, being remarkably docile.

OUR CROPS

Are not unusually heavy this season wheat predominating; very little barley, oats and corn having suffered by frost. There will be no corn here for sale. It is predicted, having been a light season for feed, that wheat will be fed to horses next Spring. "What is wheat worth?" is being asked. It is worth two cents per pound; oats and barley 1½.

These figures, Mr. Editor, may sound "big" in some localities, but, sir, farmers, as yet in Owens Valley cannot make a decent living at less rates. Just think of it! Labor high—$40 per month and board, to a good white man; have to irrigate the crop several times during the growing season; taxes from 3 to 3½ per cent; supplies and farming tools very high and the yield per acre will not exceed 1000 pounds—in many instances not 500. Why should we not realize two cents per pound for our wheat, being that it is all consumed in this interior region, when even railroad freight charges, from San Francisco here, are over three cents per pound?

We only demand a fair living price; if we cannot get it, we will have to revert to our ancient taboose diet, and wear buckskin robes and moccasins, and let our storekeepers severely alone. Then we'll be happy and mortgages unknown.

Should any of your theoretical bugs insist that they can raise grain, at present, for less than two cents, please send them this way and your humble scribbler will accommodate them with a fifty acre field as experimental ground. Let us live; the most greedy and grasping will not survive a hundred years more.

MOVING THE CROP.

Some of our farmers are already starting their teams for Mono Mills, Bodie and Lundy. The demand for agricultural products in those camps helps the farmers of Round Valley wonderfully. It would not require more than a ten cent piece to attach us to Mono county, a portion of the valley being already in Mono; hence our Mono friends have a warm place in our "buzzum."

THE "BEST CROP."

In a late issue of the Bodie Free Press we notice Geo. Childs humorously remarks that "Babies were the best crop in Owens Valley this year." Correct, old friend; editors will sometimes tell the truth. To substantiate: We saw, the other morning, a frail little woman swing a two-months' baby in her arms and yell at the top of her voice, "He's worth a million!" (She had several other "little jokers.") Her "old man" expostulated: "Say, honey, are you not exaggerating?" "Not a bit; all the Bodie mines, with the Free Press printshop thrown in—in fact, twenty millions wouldn't buy 'baby mine!'" Her "old man" struck out, smiling all over his face and half way down his back, ejaculating: "I be dod dratted if we ain't rich!"

CANDIDATES

Are circulating among us. We are glad to see them, Democrats as well as Republicans. Every sensible voter likes to take a square squint at our would-be and will be officials. Exteriors indicate, to a certain extent, interiors; physiognomists claim that even face is an index to character. All the candidates we have seen are fine-looking men, and we regret that one half of them will have to be sadly disappointed on the 4th of next November.

RUSTIC.

AN OLD TIMER GONE.—One of the old timers of Inyo passed away last week. Along in '63 and '4 Chris Hartman was in business at Bend City, and no man who ever did business in the county had more or warmer friends. Chris was a whole-souled, generous, honest, frank and kind man. To this day the mention of his name among the old pioneers draws out words of praise, though he left here more than twenty years ago. Christopher Hartman was a native of Bramel, Hanover, and was aged but 47 years, 9 months and 16 days. He died at his home in San Francisco October 13th. His wife survives him. The will has been filed for probate. The deceased, who left real and personal property of unknown value, appoints C. C. Butt and A. W. Scott his executors, turning all his property over to them in trust for the benefit of his wife and children. When the youngest child attains his majority one half of the estate is to be given to the widow of the deceased, and the remainder is to be distributed among his children, Nicholas, John H. F., Anna M. and Charles F. Hartmann, share and share alike.

Personal Mention.

E. F. Hill of Spirit Lake, Iowa, arrived here yesterday morning.

Isenel Rittgers has returned from Napa. He got his wife safely to the Asylum.

Miss Maggie Dalton came down from Benton on Tuesday, on a visit to friends in Independence.

Mrs. George Shedd of Fish Springs, and her sister, Mrs. Newland of Bishop Creek were in Independence this week visiting friends.

A Measure Of Justice.

One of the proposed amendments to the Constitution is to remove an injustice that was never intended by the framers of the instrument. Of the three proposed amendments the third is to prevent the assessment above their face value of mortgages, deeds of trust, contracts and all other kinds of obligations by which a debt is secured, as well as money and solvent credits. The Supreme Court some time since decided that the State Board of Equalization could not go into a county and raise a single assessment as returned by the Assessor and Board of Supervisors of that county, but might: when it considered the assessed value of the property of any county too low, raise the assessment of all property in that county except money. As a result of this decision the assessment of a mortgage intendes to secure the payment of a sum of money might, by the action of the State Board of Equalization, be raised above the amount of the debt it was executed to secure. The proposed amendment is designed to place all obligations the object of which is to secure the payment of fixed sum of money, in the same position as relates to taxation of money. It would be manifestly unjust to raise the assessment of a mortgage, above the face value of the note.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

PEOPLE OF INYO!!

Do You Want Capacity In Your Officers?

Read What Is Said of One of Your Candidates.

The San Francisco POST says:

"S. D. Woods has been nominated by the Republican Convention of Inyo county for Superior Judge. Mr. Woods is a talented lawyer, prompt, energetic and reliable in his profession, and will make a good Judge."

The CHRONICLE says:

"S. D. Woods, Republican nominee for Superior Judge of Inyo county, is in this city. Mr. Woods was the writer of a series of letters, published in the Chronicle in 1882 and 1883, describing his section of the country, and which were received with great favor by our readers."

The San Juan TIMES says:

"Our old and esteemed friend, Sam. D. Woods, has secured the Republican nomination for the office of Superior Judge of Inyo county. He was nominated by acclamation. Sam is one of the most noble hearted fellows in the world, and as honest as he is noble hearted. He will travel a thousand miles at his own expense to serve a friend, and will bestow his money very liberally to relieve the wants of friend or foe. We know Sam well, and hence know whereof we speak. If there is a man in this State worthy of such an office, SAM. D. WOODS is that man. We hope he will be elected by the unanimous vote of the people of Inyo county."

The ARGONAUT says:

"Among the nominees for judicial positions in the interior, there is none that gives us more pleasure than that of S. D. Woods, of Inyo county, for Superior Judge. Mr. Woods is an old resident of California, coming to this country when a boy, in the year 1849, and has for the last three years resided in the county of Inyo. His legal qualifications and his personal character are sufficient guarantees that, if elected, he will prove a competent, industrious and serviceable judge. We hope to see him elected."

The SAN FRANCISCAN says:

"S. D. Woods, who a few years ago was well known in this city as an attorney, has become a resident of Inyo county, and has been nominated for Superior Judge by the Republicans of that region. The people of Inyo will make a mistake if they do not elect Mr. Woods. He is a man of excellent character, respectable legal acquirements and good sound sense. Such men as he are needed upon the bench, not only in the interior but in this city. It is to be regretted that Mr. Woods is not a candidate for the bench here, where he is so well known to the bar, instead of in Inyo. If it depended upon the vote of San Francisco, his election would not be doubtful."

To Remove Ink Marks on Papered Walls.

Housekeepers are frequently annoyed by oil marks on papered walls against which thoughtless persons have laid their heads. These unsightly spots may be removed by making a paste of cold water and pipe clay or fuller's earth, and laying it on the surface without rubbing it on, else the pattern of the paper will then likely be injured. Leave the paste on all night. In the morning it can be brushed off and the spot will have disappeared, but a renewal of the operation may be necessary if the oil mark is old. The experiment will be likely to result most satisfactorily on plain papers, or that with the least number of colored figures.

PAPER-MAKING MATERIAL.

India and Japanese Papers—Wood Pulp—Louisiana "Bagasse."

The essential for a good paper is a substance that will pulp well and at the same time possesses a fiber sufficiently tenacious to strengthen the paper when finished, thus the tough, fibrous barks of Daphne papyracea and D. cannabina are celebrated for their great strength; and again the Japanese papers made from the inner barks of Broussonetia papyrifera and B. Kæmpferi are sometimes made as thin as gauze, and yet on account of the interlacing fibres they possess considerable strength.

Everybody knows how multitudinous and varied are the uses to which the Japanese apply paper. It is then to some of these well known foreign sources of paper material, the suitability of which is abundantly proved, that we ought to look for some of our future supplies. It is not impossible, perhaps, to export the material in the form of paper stock or half-stuff, and we might perchance get this either from the Indian daphne or the Fijian or Japanese broussonetias; besides which, the plants themselves might be introduced into some of our colonial possessions, and grown for the sake of their fibrous bark; indeed, this would seem to have been already begun by Dr. King, in the Botanic garden, Calcutta.

On all sides the question of finding substitutes for rags for paper making is acknowledged to be one of the most important. In Bavaria, according to a recently issued government report, the paper makers are directing earnest attention to the discovery of some substitute for rags, and largely adopting wood, which has not tended to improve the paper.

Among the most recent materials applied to paper making are the fibrous stems of the sugar cane after they have been passed through the mill, and the saccharine juice expressed; this, which is known as bagasse, has hitherto, in most cases, been used as fuel. In America, however, fuel of all kinds is cheap, so that in Louisiana, for instance, bagasse is seldom or never used for burning, and it is a worthless product, some planters, indeed, not knowing what to do with it. Recent experiments have shown that the hitherto useless bagasse contains a fiber that may be utilized for paper making.

It has been estimated that each planter who makes 400 hogsheads of sugar might realize no small portion of his yearly expenses by working his bagasse and extracting its fiber. A company was formed in New Orleans about a year ago to make paper out of cane fibre. Their numerous experiments have satisfactorily ascertained that paper of an excellent quality can be made from this substance, and that the material is so inexpensive that it can be profitably worked. Certain planters have offered the company all the bagasse on their places for from five to ten years, gratis.—J. R. Jackson, in Gardeners' Chronicle.

A Grateful Lioness.

A portion of a crew of a vessel which was anchored off the coast of India once went ashore for the purpose of cutting some wood, and one of the sailors, having through some cause become separated from his companions, was considerably frightened by the appearance of a huge lioness which he saw approaching him. Much to his surprise, however, she did not on coming up appear to have any evil designs on him, but instead, crouched at his feet, and looked steadfastly first at his face and then at a tree some little distance away. For a time the man could not understand this conduct; but presently, on the lioness rising and walking toward the tree, looking back at him as she went, he found out what it meant. Up in the branches of a tree was a large baboon with two little cubs in his arms, and it was because of this that the lioness was in such trouble. The difficulty now presented itself of how to save the cubs, for the sailor was afraid to climb the tree. So, having his axe with him, he resolved to cut down the tree; and this he did, the lioness watching him most anxiously during the whole time. When the tree fell, and the three animals with it, the lioness, it is said, dashed with fury upon the baboon and destroyed it; then having gently caressed her cubs for some time, she returned to the sailor, showing her gratitude by fawning upon him and rubbing her head fondly against him, and at length carried away her offspring one by one.—Harper's Young People.

What Actors Should Eat.

Shoemakers and butchers, says a writer in a French dramatic review, can eat what they please. Not so actors, who must vary their food to suit the parts they play.

In the first place, they must not eat artichokes, for artichokes make people stutter in talking.

When a singer orders rabbits at a restaurant he must ask to see the head, to make sure that he is not being imposed upon.

The cat is the tenor's worst enemy.

Singers must also eschew sweets. Bassos and heavy villians generally must eat game, especially the dark meat, and drink heavy wines. Wild boar is good, but not the tame variety.

The man who plays the hero should feed upon raw roast beef, washed down with old port wine.

The ingenues should avoid high seasoning and rich sauces. Chicken and spinach, with milk as a beverage; but let them beware of the calf's head.

Of course the young man who takes the lover's part should fly from beefsteak and onions as from a pestilence.

Those who play such diaphanous parts as the commander in "Don Juan" and the elder Mr. Hamlet, should not be allowed to dine at all.

Syria has ninety-five silk factories, which give employment to about eighteen thousand men, boys and girls, whose daily wages range from 8 to 27 cents each.

"WHY SHOULDN'T I?"

My canary sings the whole day long,
  Behind his gilded bars,
Shut in from all that birds enjoy
  Under the sun and stars:
The freedom, grace, and action fine
  Of wild birds he foregoes,
But spite of that, with happiness
  His little heart o'erflows.
    "The world is wide,
      And birds outside
In happy cheer always abide—
  Why shouldn't I?"

I, too, must dwell behind the bars
  Of toil and sacrifice;
From every heart and weary brain
  My prayers or songs arise:
But all around, sad hearts abound
  And troubles worse than mine,
If aught of comfort I can bring
  To them, shall I repine?
    God's world is wide;
      If I can hide
The crowding tears and sing beside—
  Why shouldn't I?

Hints to Married Folks.

A writer in the New York World says: "I may as well say why it is that people sometimes find out after marriage that they do not love each other, and therefore become very miserable. In a recent divorce suit it was brought out in a testimony of the wife that one of the reasons why she could not endure her husband was that he snored. Did you ever think of that for a reason for finding anybody incompatible? I have no doubt you will at least say that you have found it a reason for feeling that some one was unendurable. It is a misfortune that one should snore, not a crime, and one that belongs to men exclusively, or nearly so, but a misfortune has before now been urged as a good and sufficient reason for divorce, as in case of insanity. Whether snoring is a valid excuse for divorce, I should not undertake to say—certainly it would be if the man snores very loud and the woman is obliged to sleep in the same room with him. From what I have heard of snoring I should say that anybody is justified in getting out of the sound of it by either legal or illegal means. Mind me, I am not attacking the man who snores. I am not saying he ought to do better, or that he ought to be arrested for it, or that he can in any way help it any more than he can help having an appetite for dinner, but I am simply trying to make it understood that people, male and female, are justified in avoiding him when asleep. If the man who snores has a wife at all, it should be a woman who sleeps so soundly that she is not disturbed by thunder or anything of that kind. But what I desire to speak of are the disagreeable things that married people do which are not unavoidable like snoring, but which spring from carelessness and indifference towards each other. The enchantment of courtship ought to last much longer than it often does. With some it appears to last all through life. Some married people never get to know each other too well, but keep up always the gentle mystery that hides realities that become disagreeable through too close an acquaintance. However ardent the lover, there is a certain amount of deception that he enjoys. I do not mean deception in the sense of deceiving through treacherous or wicked intent, but that playful disguise which is put on to please and make happy. How many husbands and wives who commence life full of love and devotion, cease their efforts to please each other from the day the honeymoon goes down! The wife becomes deeply absorbed in her household duties. She forgets that her husband is still a man who likes to see a well-dressed lady. She becomes careless of her personal attire and her personal appearance when no one is to see her but her husband, when the truth is, she should take more pains to please his eye than anybody else's. It is a great mistake to suppose that he is not, just like other people, favorably impressed with a little powder and appropriate dressing. She need not attire herself in elaborate and expensive robes to meet him when he comes home from his daily occupation, but she can wash her face, comb her hair, put on a neat, trim, clean, pretty wrapper, and stick a flower in her bosom. All this helps. It robs life of its too excessive reality. And the husband owes much to the wife in the way of personal habit and personal attire. He should be the same "nice" man after marriage that he was before marriage. He must not turn out to be something altogether different from what it was that his wife fell in love with, otherwise she may become disenchanted and have a good excuse for accusing him of having won her under false pretenses. Finally, we must not take too much for granted, but to be something new, attractive and lovable.

Hahnemann's Cholera Cure.

A remedy for the cholera, which it is said was the result of many experiments made by Dr. Hahnemann, the founder of homœopathy, consists of veratrum album, in five-minute doses of eight or ten globules each, in water. No water or other drink is to be allowed. Vomiting is to be checked by frequent solutions of three to five drops of spirits of camphor, and arsenicum metallicum album is to be used in like quantities should the body become cold.—Chicago News.

FIRE AND FRIENDS.

Terrible Experience of a Colorado Man on a Burning Prairie.

A prairie fire. Who that has seen one can ever forget its magnificent terrors, real and imaginary? Far down on the horizon dense volumes of smoke with a brassy glare hide the rays of the sun while yet the day is young. Noon approaches, but the curling, seething spirals hide the god of day as if some hideous monster was spreading a dreadful pall over the face of Nature, making the midday seem almost as twilight, but with none of the heavenly planets to cheer the dismal scene. Nearer and nearer comes the dread apparition, and as the long-hidden sun sinks in the west a crimson glow lights the heavens from zenith to horizon; hot, sickening blasts from the roaring monster almost stifle the awed and frightened beholder while yet miles away; urging his frightened steed onward, he flees on his race for life, lucky if he reaches the far-distant river toward which he is flying ere he is folded in the embrace of the fiery demon.

"Such was my experience," said an old pioneer to a News reporter in Charpiot's yesterday; "but with the added horrors of the fear of falling in the hands of some red demons, who were on the warpath and who, although pursued likewise by the dreaded fire fiend, still maintained their bloodthirsty instincts and desire for white men's scalps, seemingly all unappalled by the common danger which threatened every living thing, animate and inanimate, in its course. The circumstances were these," said the narrator: "Some twenty-four years ago I was in the employ of the Overland Stage Company. Reports came in that the Sioux were on the warpath and had been seen in large numbers near the Santa Fe trail, the route pursued by our stages. I was stationed at the time at Fort Dodge and had a general supervision of the stages and live stock. Feeling somewhat uneasy, as several coaches loaded with passengers and treasure were on the road, I selected one of the best horses in the stable and started west on the trail. The afternoon of the third day, upon reaching the top of a low sand dune, I saw at a distance of perhaps three miles at least a score of redskins filing over a small rocky bluff. I would have retraced my steps to avoid being seen, but discovered that I was too late, as the Indians had changed their course and were charging directly for me.

"Putting spurs to my animal I started on the dead run, not having much fear but that I could escape. At first, however, the race seemed a pretty even thing between the two foremost of my pursuers and myself. Soon, however, the distance between us was lengthened, and after riding hard for a couple of hours, my enemies had disappeared. I knew, however, that I was not out of danger, and anticipated that every moment I would meet others of the merciless foe. In this I was not mistaken, as I had not proceeded many miles further before a bullet whistled past my ear. This was followed by a perfect volley. At the same moment some cottonwoods several hundred yards to the right seemed suddenly to become perfectly alive with Sioux. Dashing forth with a wild whoop and mounted on fresh horses, while mine was considerably jaded, the distance between us was soon lessened nearly one-half. Spurring my animal to almost inconceivable efforts, I soon had distanced all but three of the murderous gang, who were slowly gaining on me, keeping up an almost constant fire meanwhile. Turning in my saddle I fired at the nearest foe, who rolled from his saddle, and his body was hidden in the high grass, which here grew in wild prairie abundance. This caused a momentary pause on the part of the other two, but instantly, however, they were again in full cry. At this moment I for the first time became aware of a new danger. I had for some time detected the odor of smoke, and looking up, saw the lurid reflection of a prairie-fire reflected on the sky. The sun had gone down and the shadows were fast lengthening on the plain. Almost maddened with the terrors of my position I urged my exhausted animal to the utmost possible speed. Soon the hot breath of the flames seemed to lick my very eye-balls with their fervid tongues. In thinking of this new horror I had almost forgotten the scarcely less terrible Sioux. Glancing hastily over my shoulder I saw that the two Indians were close behind me, evidently thinking that fear of the flames would make me an easy prey. I was at this time on the very edge of the ocean of fire, which was hissing and crackling around me with a continuous seething roar. At this moment, upon turning, I discovered one of the redskins immediately at my horses' heels with tomahawk raised to cleave my skull. As quick as thought I raised my rifle partially and put a bullet through his brain. We were then just within the edge of the flame, and as he fell headlong I could imagine the odor of burning flesh sizzing in the fierce blast. Wrapped in a perfect sheet of fire my maddened animal made a last desperate leap, and we both fell. How long I lay there I know not. The sun was high in the heavens when I regained consciousness, and opening my burning eyes, I saw a group standing around me. One glance and I saw they were friends.

"It seems to me that my course of the night before had taken me back again to the stage trail, and the eastern-bound coach had found me lying there, apparently only a charred remnant of humanity beside my dead horse. A close examination, however, showed that I was not dead, and restoratives having been applied, I was soon recovered sufficiently to be placed in the stage. It was months before I entirely recovered from my terrible burns and the fearful shock my system had sustained from the combined horrors through which I had gone."—Rocky Mountain News.

UNCLE TANTIA.

A Hindoo Outlaw with a History Full of Romantic Incidents.

A Hindoo outlaw of the genuine Robin Hood type has for some time been baffling all the attempts which the Indian police have made to capture him. The Central Provinces is the site of this dusky bandit's exploits, and in the broken country which there abounds, protected wherever he goes by the population, it seems probable that Nana Tantia—"Uncle Tantia," as the people affectionately call him—will still enjoy a long period of immunity under the gay greenwood. The offender is a favorite everywhere, and something of a popular hero. Handsome in face and figure, an accomplished horseman, expert in many exercises, and with an excellent touch on the cithara, Tantia calls himself the friend of the poor, and distributes other people's goods among them with the utmost generosity. He has a ready wit, too, and is forgiven many a crime for the humor that accompanied its commission; while, above all, he is courtesy and chivalry itself to the fair sex. He comes into a village, and nobody opposing them, he and his merry men rob the richest inhabitants and beat them into the bargain, for daring to be richer than their neighbors, give away a considerable proportion of plunder to the mediants of the place, make a handsome present to the temple, and then, after entertaining the village at a feast and an entertainment, in which the captain of the outlaws takes the place of chief performer, the freebooters go their way. In due time the police come up to investigate, and, though the plundered men vow and protest that they were robbed and beaten in open daylight, and give an exact account of the outlaw's merry-making at their expense, not a soul in the village can be found to confess that he or she knows anything about the occurrences which those who were recently rich declare to have taken place in their midst! The beggars, with Tantia's rupees in their waistcoats, deny that they ever saw the vagabond near the place, and as for the other villagers who feasted with the gang and applauded the captain's singing and strumming, they are lost in astonishment at any one ever thinking they could do such a thing, or that evil deeds could be tolerated in a well-regulated village like theirs. So from place to place the police have gone on for months, wandering after the will-o'-the-wisp—this perpetually-vanishing Robin Hood, who stands charged by every rich native along the road with having robbed him, and acquitted by every poor one of having ever been seen in the neighborhood. Uncle Tantia, therefore, may reasonably expect a long lease of popular favor; for, in India, when a brigand of this sort has once established his reputation as the enemy of a special class only, and is known to be a man of his word, punishing treachery swiftly and severely, and rewarding friendship with liberality, he blossoms into a local hero, and can confide in the good faith of a majority in every village he enters. The minions of the law who seek his capture come to be looked upon as the patrons and colleagues of the rich money-lenders who grind down the peasant, and the countryside conspires to put them off the track of their dashing benefactor and to baffle their pursuit. As for Tantia himself, he seems to have no anxieties about his security, for if he hears there is any fun going—a fair or a wedding—in a village near his hiding-place, he sallies out with his tried men and true, to join in the merriment. Sometimes, even, he invites a village to join in his hunting expeditions, and, as he and his gang are expert sportsmen, the game which they kill provides a public feast. As for the flour and ghee, sweetmeats and liquor, his good friends, the wealthiest merchants, provide these, free of cost, and with such grace as they can command fill the outlaw's purse with money so that before he goes he can dispense his alms with customary liberality and receive the blessing of the temple folk in return for his pious charities. No woman or girl has ever had cause to complain of the captain or any of his men, and the result is that the jeweled bride and her fair attendants may pass the outlaw's haunts not only without harm but with every courtesy of the road being shown them, while her father and stout zemindar, surrounded though he be with followers all armed with their best, have to pay toll or fight for it with Tantia's Little Johns and Will Scarlets.—London Telegraph.

The Congo Valley, Africa.

Mr. Stanley, the famous African explorer, is now in England, and has been talking freely with the reporters concerning his experience in the dark continent. In speaking of the health of the valley the report of the London Times says:—

"Mr. Stanley maintains that apart from a little risk of fever when passing up the mouth of the river, there is no reason why white men should not enjoy as good health in Africa as in England. All the deaths among his own men he attributes to gross imprudence, and above all to reckless exposure in the sun and the incautious use of alcoholic drinks. The heavy and strong Portuguese wine in use on the Congo has especially led to many disasters. It seems not to be uncommon at some of the lower stations for white men to drink a tumbler or two of this strong wine for lunch, go to sleep for an hour or two, and then rush out at the sound of the gong to resume their tasks under a blazing sun. Inevitably, almost, these men are down with fever in a few hours, and a considerable proportion of them succumb altogether. No alcohol during the day is Mr. Stanley's rule, though at the evening meal there is no reason why a man should not indulge moderately."

As to the alleged barrenness of Africa Mr. Stanley further says:—

"The Congo region, at least, he maintains, is one of the most fertile on the globe. We are usually told by those who take a pessimistic view of Africa that ivory, gum, and oil are the only products of any consequence, and that the first will be exhausted in a few years. But Mr. Stanley tells me that ivory will last for generations yet, that gum and oil alone give an ample field for trade. On returning to England this time he came in a steamer that touched at about fifty places on the West Coast, among others, at Old Calabar. There he found that oil was being shipped at the rate of five hundred tons a week, and all this obtained from a stretch of country only forty-two miles in extent. All along the one thousand miles of the middle and upper Congo the banks are crowded with oil-palms; and, said he, divide that 1,000 by 42, and it will give you some idea of what you may expect the Congo to produce. Not only so, but the country abounds in the wild coffee plant, the berries of which, even in its uncultivated state, produce an excellent beverage. The orchilla plant is equally abundant, and both the native and the white settlers have extensive banana plantations. Not only bananas, but oranges and other fruits have been cultivated with complete success; so that Mr. Stanley considers himself perfectly justified in maintaining that the native products themselves are varied and inexhaustible, and that the country is capable of unlimited agricultural development."

It appears from this that Africa will erelong be a desirable place for many white people to live; hence the necessity of planting the ancient gospel there at an early day.

Saratoga as a Slave Mart.

I learn on seemingly excellent authority that on Monday a colored girl belonging to a Cuban family stopping at a hotel here noted for its specialty of Cuban patrons was sold in the regular, customary manner for the sum of $1,200. The bill of sale was drawn in the usual way, save that it was dated Havana, Cuba, June 22, 1884, instead of Saratoga, N. Y., August 26, 1884,—the day of the exchange of property and price. The bill of sale is drawn by a Spanish or Cuban attorney—a guest at the same hotel with the high contracting parties. The colored girl is about twenty years of age, very light-colored, and very comely to look upon. She was a nurse in the family of her recent owners, and in that capacity has visited Saratoga three or four years. The purchaser is a Cuban widower, also a guest at the same house. He has been a widower about ten years, and has no children. It is said that he will be married upon his return to Havana, in October. It is not generally known that slaves have been brought to Saratoga by their owners for nearly a hundred years. Most of them were, of course, brought by Southerners of our own country, before the war. It was said in those days that it was not unusual for a family or an individual to transfer a slave here, the documentary portion of the transaction being generally deferred until home was reached. Usually the case was one of money-raising, though sometimes it was merely a desire on the one side to acquire a servant and a willingness on the other side to sell the one wanted. The sale of a slave in Saratoga in 1884 is, however, an extraordinary matter. Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe might find in Saratoga material for a greater book than "Uncle Tom's Cabin."—Saratoga Letter to New York Times.

Finally fell these over a doubtful case in a lively quarrel. "My sir," turned himself the one of the players to him, "have you the kindness to decide who of us both right has?" "Yes, my sir, with pleasure, if I but the game that you play understand." "How, to the devil! you know the play not at all? Why have you them ten hours here sat?" "My sir, I am married!!!"—Louisville Courier-Journal.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.:
SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 1,.....1884.

Published Every Saturday, by
C. MULHOLLAND.

A young man named Scott, from Fresno county, arrived here a few days ago; he is suffering from heart disease, and is now under the care of Doctor Stevenson.

Hundreds of million of dollars are now in the United States treasury. When James Buchanan went out of office there was not a dollar in it.

George M. Lee, one of the men concerned in the shooting affray at Lundy is said to be a nephew of the Lee of Mountain Meadow massacre notoriety.

CONTRARY to what had been expected, the men implicated in the troubles at Lundy were arrested without further trouble. The Free Press of Tuesday says: "The Sheriff's posse returned from Lundy yesterday. The desired arrests were made without any difficulty and the arrested men escorted to Bridgeport.

THERE is reported to be a remarkable change of sentiment among the large land holders in the Sacramento valley. Formerly they would not sell small tracts of land, but now they are said to be very willing to sell twenty or forty acre lots to fruit growers, as the remainder of their lands is much increased in value by the establishment of these small holdings.

In his speach here last Wednesday evening, Mr. Ayers said the State printing office could easily print all the school text books needed in the state. The books could be sold without loss to the state, at about one fourth what similar books now cost. Mr. Ayers is superintendent of the State Printing office, a life long printer and quite competent to pronounce in this matter.

EXCURSION tickets to New Orleans and return will be sold by the Central Pacific railroad for $140. Tickets will be placed on sale November 20th next, and must be used for the eastward trip within thirty days of the date of sale, and for return trip within sixty days of date of same. It is possible that the time for the return trip may be extended to ninety days. Tickets will not be sold after April 30, 1885.

BY A decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, just rendered, the course of Attorney General Marshall in the railroad tax cases has been fully sustained. This must be very humiliating to Governor Stoneman, who called the extra session of the Legislature chiefly to condemn the action of Mr. Marshall. Nothing, however, can reduce the Governor to smaller dimensions; Mr. Marshall had already ground him down to the condition of an ultimate atom.

THE conviction at Salt Lake of such a noted Mormon as Clawson is hailed with great pleasure by all decent people. When a jury can be found in the midst of the Mormons to convict for this crime against woman, there is good ground for hope that the barbarous practice of polygamy may be abolished in a civilized nation. This Mormon practice is in defiance of the law of the land, and in contempt of the laws of nature, and of nature's God.

RENDERING PAPER WATERPROOF.—Labels may be fixed upon tin boxes, etc., exposed to damp, by the following method: White of egg is diluted with one-half part water, and applied with a brush to the surfaces to be united. A hot iron is then passed over the paper, so as to coagulate the albumen. By means of successive layers of paper and albumen, waterproof boxes, etc., may be formed.—

To destroy red ants, grease a plate with lard and set it where ants congregate; place a few bits of wood so the ants can climb on the plate easily; they will forsake any food for lard; when the plate is well covered with them turn it over a hot fire of coals; they will drop into the fire, and you can then reset the plate for another catch. A few repetitions will clean them out.

To make cloth waterproof, dissolve eight pounds oleic acid in six quarts of alcohol; add gradually twenty pounds sulphate of alumina, leave twenty-four hours to settle; carefully pour off the liquid and save the remaining deposit; filter this through flannel and press it into a cake. Dissolve one pound of this in fifteen to twenty gallons of water, strain, saturate the fabric thoroughly, remove and let dry. The fabric is waterproof without having its ventilating qualities destroyed.

PEOPLE OF INYO!!

Do You Want Capacity In Your Officers?

Read What Is Said of One of Your Candidates.

The San Francisco POST says:

"S. D. Woods has been nominated by the Republican Convention of Inyo county for Superior Judge. Mr. Woods is a talented lawyer, prompt, energetic and reliable in his profession, and will make a good Judge."

The CHRONICLE says:

"S. D. Woods, Republican nominee for Superior Judge of Inyo county, is in this city. Mr. Woods was the writer of a series of letters, published in the Chronicle in 1882 and 1883, describing his section of the country, and which were received with great favor by our readers."

The San Juan TIMES says:

"Our old and esteemed friend, Sam. D. Woods, has secured the Republican nomination for the office of Superior Judge of Inyo county. He was nominated by acclamation. Sam is one of the most noble hearted fellows in the world, and as honest as he is noble hearted. He will travel a thousand miles at his own expense to serve a friend, and will bestow his money very liberally to relieve the wants of friend or foe. We know Sam well, and hence know whereof we speak. If there is a man in this State worthy of such an office, Sam. D. Woods is that man. We hope he will be elected by the unanimous vote of the people of Inyo county."

The ARGONAUT says:

"Among the nominees for judicial positions in the interior, there is none that gives us more pleasure than that of S. D. Woods, of Inyo county, for Superior Judge. Mr. Woods is an old resident of California, coming to this country when a boy, in the year 1849 and has for the last three years resided in the county of Inyo. His legal qualifications and his personal character are sufficient guarantees that, if elected, he will prove a competent, industrious and servicable judge. We hope to see him elected."

The SAN FRANCISCAN says:

"S. D. Woods, who a few years ago was well known in this city as an attorney, has become a resident of Inyo county, and has been nominated for Superior Judge by the Republicans of that region. The people of Inyo will make a mistake if they do not elect Mr. Woods. He is a man of excellent character, respectable legal acquirements and good sound sense. Such men as he are needed upon the bench, not only in the interior but in this city. It is to be regretted that Mr. Woods is not a candidate for the bench here, where he is so well known to the bar, instead of in Inyo. If it depended upon the vote of San Francisco, his election would not be doubtful."

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.:
SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 1,.....1884.

CLOSE SEASON.—The close season for trout, or time during which it is unlawful to catch them, commences to-day.

FOUND.—A purse containing a sum of money has been found, the owner can have it by identification; apply to Mr. Joslyn.

EXTENDING.—Mr. Tom Luther says Captain Keeler has made an extension of his residence at Keeler; he has added three inches to the length of the building.

REDUCED FARE.—On the arrival of all trains at Independence station, comfortable conveyance and good horses are in attendance to carry passengers to any part of town for fifty cents each.

H. LEVY, Stage Proprietor

PORK AND BACON.—Around Bishop Creek farmers are now curing hams and bacon. Mr. A. K. Briggs has a large quantity already smoked. Buyers from distant places are around making offers for all there is to sell. Live hogs are held by their owners at six and a half cents per pound.

ROLL OF HONOR.—Following is the Roll of Honor of the Irving School for October: Agnes Ford, Nettie Ford, Hattie Van Eps, Angie Brockman, Minnie Brockman, Lulu McLaren and Minnie Smith. During the month Nettie Ford has kept at the head of her class in spelling. MRS. H. H. WELSH, Teacher.

MINE SOLD.—The Free Press says; "The Silver Lining mine at Aurora formerly owned by ex-Governor Blasdel and San Francisco parties, has changed hands. Messrs. Holt and Colcord become owners in the property. Particulars of the transaction have not been ascertained.

KEELER MILL STOPPED.—For some weeks past the mill at Keeler was running on ore from Poleta mine. The mill was rented by William Irving of Bodie to make a test of the ore, and was managed by Thom Luther. The result of the test is reported by Mr. Luther to be entirely satisfactory, and a mill will at once be bought and moved to the mine, or a new mill will be built.

ETERNAL YOUTH.—Time writes wrinkles on the fairest brow, and the beauty that fired the imagination of the poet, or gave an increased strength to the arm of valor, will soon be but a tradition. A good picture, however, will preserve for the delight of generations yet unborn the form and features fair to look upon. The only magician who can confer the gift of eternal youth is the skillful artist. Mr. John A. Hanson is such an artist; he intends to visit Owens valley soon, and having known him for several years we can confidently commend him to the people of Inyo as a fine artist and an honorable man.

PERMANENT IMPROVEMENTS.—The settlers near Bishop Creek, and in Round valley, are making many permanent improvements. The rapid growth of young trees is the most noticable and pleasing of these improvements. Orchards and live fences are rapidly changing the aspect of the country. The nakedness and desert look of the land is rapidly giving place to fertility and homelikeness. In a very few years Bishop Creek will be the center of a region surpassing in attractiveness any farming country in New York or Pennsylvania. The far milder climate of Owens valley make it a much more desirable place to build up a home than can be found in any of those older states, while the abundance of cheap land here offers facilities that have long since ceased to exist in the east.

KILLED BY CARS.—A former resident of Inyo has been killed by railroad cars. The Calico Print of last Saturday says: "James Cunningham, well known in Calico and Inyo county, was killed on last Sunday night three miles west of Hinckley station, on the A. & P. railroad. It appears he had been drinking pretty hard on that afternoon and boarded a freight train at this station with the intention of going to Independence, with the above result. Deceased was aged about 34 years, and had the reputation of being industrious and steady. An inquest was held by Judge Gregory at which the remains were fully identified, and by the testimony it was learned that Cunningham had left on the train sitting on a flat car loaded with iron, from which he must have rolled underneath the train. He was brought to this station by the passenger train on Monday, and buried by his friends that evening."

CAUGHT A TARTAR.—Some days ago an Indian who had been drinking was ordered out of Bishop Creek by the deputy Sheriff. The Indian moved away a short distance and then refused to go any farther; the officer took hold of him to force him away, and at once a violent struggle ensued. The men fought for some time, but the officer was got under and so used up by the Indian that he asked to be let up. The Indian let him go, and on regaining his feet and wind he thought surely he could master the red man, and pitched at him again. Another long struggle followed, but again the officer was under, and the Indian pounded him severely, till at length he got tired and walked away, believing the officer badly used up. The struggle took place in the night, and too far from dwellings for the officer to call for help. Where officers are liable to such collisions, they ought to provide themselves with a club, or some more potent means of defense. Who can doubt which was the most culpable in this case, the drunken Indian, or the white man from whom he got the liquor?

GOOD ENOUGH.—When down at Darwin a few days ago, Sheriff Gregg visited a claim on which a strike has lately been made by Jerry Fitzgerald, and his partner, Richard Decker. Enough work has been done to prove the ledge well defined and of good extent. The ore is silver and carries sixteen hundred ounces per ton. The same parties are now opening another ledge in the same locality that goes eight hundred ounces per ton. Mr. Gregg brought some of the ore to town; in the best specimens native silver runs all through the ore. These samples look very rich. Near Darwin Fitzgerald and Decker some time since found a vein of copper that carries forty per cent of this metal, and some silver. They are certain this ore will pay a good profit by shipping to San Francisco, and intend to begin making shipments soon. J. E. Eddy has teams at work hauling wood to Snow's Canyon; he has a large quantity of valuable ore at the mill there, and expects to begin crushing about ten days hence. This ore is certain to leave a big margin of profit.

A FAILING OF MEMORY.—When under the influence of a mighty enthusiasm a public speaker is not unlikely to forget facts, no matter what may be the subject of his discourse, for

"Even ministers they hae been kenned,
In holy rapture,
A rousing whid to vend,
An' raise wi' Scripture."

A lay man may therefore well be pardoned if he fails of hitting the nail of truth squarely on the head, and certainly cannot take offense at being set right. In his speech here on Wednesday evening last, Mr. Ayers in recapitulating the Martin Koszta incident, said Lieutenant Ingraham (he did not become a Captain till two years after this incident) wrote to Mr. Marcy, that a man who had declared his intention of becoming an American citizen had been unlawfully arrested, and was then a prisoner on board of an Austrian war vessel, and asking for instructions as to what he (Ingraham) should do in the matter; that President Pierce and Secretary Marcy both at once wrote to Lieutenant Ingraham, instructing him at all hazards to rescue Koszta, and proceeding on these instructions, Ingraham cleared his decks for action, raised his portholes, (how is that, shipmate?) and demanded that the prisoner be released, a demand that was immediately complied with. Now the facts are: Koszta was arrested in Smyrna on June 21, 1853; the telegraphic cable was not laid across the Atlantic till August 5, 1858, and before Ingraham could have made a report of the arrest to Washington and received instructions in reply, Koszta would have been landed in an Austrian port, tried, convicted, and hanged higher than Haman. What Ingraham did do was to communicate with Mr. Brown, the United States representative at Constantinople, who officially expressed the opinion that the surrender of Koszta should be demanded. Ingraham made the demand July 24. The Austrian consul-general at Smyrna proposed to deliver Koszta into the hands of the French consul, to be held by him subject to the disposition of the consuls of the United States and Austria, and not to be set at liberty till both consuls should give their assent. As this proposition gave sufficient assurance of the personal safety of Koszta, Ingraham accepted it, and the Hungarian was soon set at liberty. The conduct of Ingraham was not approved by the Government and Congress till August 4, 1854, thirteen months after the event. Any administration the United States has ever had would have approved the action of Ingraham, and it is safe to say that while free schools and a free press exist we never will have an administration that would not approve such action.

Personal Mention.

Messrs. Chas. Groves and John Anton came up from Lone Pine this morning.

Ed Walker came up from Olancha last Tuesday, and remained in town a few days.

Mr. M. C. Lasky returned from San Francisco a few days ago, where he graduated from Heald's Business College with the highest honors.

Dick Hessian of Big Pine was in town most of the week; he said he was driven from home by an army of vagrants who claimed to be candidates.

Pap Walker came up from Olancha last Wednesday in time to preside at the Democratic meeting in the evening. Pap makes a patriarchal looking presiding officer.

R. J. Van Voorhies, Republican candidate for the Assembly, was in Independence this week. He did not hold meetings or make speeches. Mr. Van Voorhies appears to be a wide-awake, intelligent man, having a good deal of knowledge of men and affairs, and would doubtless make a good representative.

Lasky Mill

ED. INDEPENDENT:—Following is a statement of the Beveridge mines and operations of the Lasky mill, and ore crushed by the same for about 73 days run of 12 hours per day, during August, September, and October:

HOW OTHERS SEE US.

To see ourselves as others see us is not always disagreeable. The following communication to the Pacific Rural Press was written by a gentleman who recently made a trip through Owens Valley, and is interesting as showing how the country appears to a disinterested visitor:

EDITORS PRESS:—Inyo county was organized in 1866, and is as yet comparatively new—much of it virgin ground in both a mineral and agricultural sense.

In configuration its surface is as diversified as it well can be, with its untold lofty mountain ridges and almost as numerous deep valleys. On one hand Mount Whitney towers to the unwonted hight of 14,984 feet above the level of the sea; on the other, not more than 100 miles away, Death Valley sinks to the depth of 100 feet below where the waves of the Pacific ocean break upon the rocks and cliffs of your Golden Gate.

OWENS RIVER VALLEY

Lies immediately east of the higher Sierras is from 60 to 70 miles in length, [—including Round Valley, Owens River Valley is probably 100 miles long.—ED.], and varies from 5 to 15 miles in width.

Its soil is alluvial, in places rich in vegetable mold, generally sandy, and in some parts spotted with alkali.

Although all cereals, vegetables and fruits of a temperate climate are produced, wheat may be at present considered the staple, yielding all the way from 500 to 2,000 pounds per acre, and in some instances as much as 3,000 pounds—coming, perhaps, fully up to the general average for California. The farms are generally in tracts of 160 acres, rarely containing over 500. There is much of what may be styled

MIXED AGRICULTURE.

On one small ranch may be seen, growing side by side, wheat, oats, barley, Indian corn, alfalfa, potatoes, onions, etc., to the end of the chapter, while the house is hid away behind an orchard, loaded, this year at least, with fruit of almost every variety to be found in the catalogue. Then there are besides, all the poultry, the pigs, the calves and the colts within sight or in the nearest pasture. It requires labor to take care of all, but ought to make one feel quite independent without much of a bank account.

But, after all, taxes must be paid, clothing must be bought, and many necessaries that cannot be had without the cash. The want most felt here just now is a good market for the surplus produce. Once the mines here and in the State of Nevada consumed the greater part. These, in comparison with former years, are now almost at a stand-still. Again, the Carson & Colorado Railroad has recently come in, requiring a new adjustment to the changed relations. Evidently

A CHANGE OF PROGRAMME IS NEEDED.

If paying prices cannot be obtained at home for grain and flour, the surplus must be fed to hogs, cattle, and other live stock. Bacon and beef usually bring a fair price at home or abroad. So do large mules and horses.

In union there is strength; in the multitude of counselors there is wisdom. If the farmers here could meet together in club or Grange, gather facts, compare notes, fix prices, co-operate in bringing in water, building warehouses, and in all matters of mutual interest, much might possibly be done towards relief from present embarrassment, to say nothing of the quickened impulse given to existing industries and the bringing into life of many yet unborn.

In years past, much bacon and flour was imported. Three good mills, now making an excellent quality of flour, are capable of supplying the home demand.

A few are beginning to turn attention to making bacon for market. Mr. A. K. Briggs, of Bishop Creek, is now in the business. He finds it pays. His pigs get some grain for the first three or four months. They then have access to a stack of alfalfa, cut while quite tender. No more grain is required until ready to fatten. He turned a considerable number of hogs into bacon at from 13 to 15 cents per pound, and expects to fatten a much larger number the ensuing season. Some little has been accomplished in improving the blood of horses, sheep and cattle. A few imported Norman horses were met with in the vicinity of Bishop Creek.

Mr. C. B. Rawson, lately from Los Angeles county, has secured a good quantity of land at very reasonable rates, not far from Independence, with the view of stock raising. He will give most attention to cattle. He is well pleased with the prospect, is wide awake and on the lookout for the best breeds—form, size, and every other quality taken into consideration—of what a good beef-producing animal should be, in accord with his highest ideal.

PISICULTURE.

No fish were originally found in Owens river, or its tributaries. It is understood that they have within the past few years been stocked with trout and cat fish, so that the finest kind of sport is now afforded the angler in many of the streams. Carp do well. Of the number of those who have ponds well stocked, may be named Mr. Kispert, near Independence; Messrs. Yaney & Rowan, Bishop Creek; and Mr. T. E. Jones of Round Valley—the pioneer in this line, the most extensively engaged, and the most devoted to the pursuit.

He commenced a little over three years ago with about 250 carp. He has since sold about $1,000 worth. He now has 15 acres, with seven ponds well stocked with fish of all ages and sizes. The largest pond of ten acres is the outlet for the whole. Late in autumn they are drained in their order, beginning with the lowest. The larger fish are taken out as each pond is drained, and put into boarded tanks, where they are cleaned from the mud and its effects by means of a constant stream of pure mountain water—the meat being rendered firmer and more palatable. They are now fed for winter use when trout and catfish are not in market. He has utilized some wet lands on his place for the business, and is fully satisfied that it will pay far better than the same number of acres devoted to farm products.

THE APIARY

"Full many a flower is born to blush unseen, and waste its sweetness on the desert air," for want of bees to turn each little treasure to good account. Alfalfa, pronounced (by Wm. Mut- Rasmussen. Vice-President for California, of the Amercan Bee-keepers Association and the only specialist in this line of the valley), to be the very best article of food for the bees, is found growing every where. Besides this there is the wild rabbit bush, so called, bristling all over with a yellow-hued flower, together with similar sweet scented shrubbery, which makes a beautiful golden-colored honey little less pleasing to the eye and taste than honey extracted from Alfalfa.

Mr. Jas. Shaw, Bishop Creek, has 100 stands. His honey is said to be spoken of in the San Francisco market as fully equal to, if not superior to the very best from other places.

Mr. O. Allerton, Big Pine, commenced three years ago without any knowledge of the business with 20 hives. Last year he sold upwards of 6000 lbs of honey for about $800. It is a beautiful clear white, and unsurpassed in flavor. It is understood that Mr. Root a noted bee-keeper of Ohio, pronounces it equal to the best in the world.

Mr. Jas. Hall, of the same place has 100 stands and will probably make this year some 6000 lbs. Mr. Baxter of Independence has 130 hives, Mr. Conolly of the same place about 100. Several others in the valley have more or less.

There is still room for a very large increase in the business, for the character of the honey made here will always find ready sale for it.

FRUIT GROWING.

The present year fruit of all kind has been plentiful. It is not considered a very safe crop in some parts, more particulary in the northern portions of the valley, where apples and plums generally succeed well. Let a few instances by way of illustration, be taken from Big Pine and places lying farther south. Mrs. S. M. Bell, Mr. W. A. Baker, and others whose places are on bench lands near the foothills of the Sierras, have a large amount of fruit of almost every variety and of excellent quality. The growing length of the letter necessarily curtails some of the most interesting details.

Among the varieties of apple that do best, Mr. Baker names the following, taken somewhat in their order: The Jennetin, the Spitzbergen, the Winesap and Pipin. Although the trees are loaded down, the fruit is very large and juicy, and much better flavored than the same variety west of the mountains.

They bring from six to eight cents per pound, peaches and nectarines from three to six cents, and grapes about the same. In addition to the above, Mrs. Bell has given considerable attention to the smaller varieties. Omitting mention of the raspberry, strawberry and some others that usually do well in all parts of the valley, her Dorchester blackberry, an early variety ripening here by the 4th of July, is highly spoken of. The Wilson has not been a success, but the Lawton and Kittatinny are represented as full and long berries, and possessing as fine a flavor as the sweetest wild berry. Her blackberry season lasts from the 4th of July to the middle of September. A ton of pears was gathered from 15 of her Doyenne d'Ete trees, the first full crop since they began to bear, and 3000 pounds of Bartletts from a little upward of twenty trees. Of other varieties, the Winter Nelis is most prized.

At Lone Pine, in the lower part of the valley, peaches and grapes in particular are found to be of a very superior quality.

Mr. R. Diaz, formerly of Chili, seems to be a master at the business. Up to this point many fine grapes were seen, and some of them might be pronounced delicious, but here they were found equal in all respects to any hitherto met with in the most favored localities on your side of the mountains. In short, a sweeter or better grape is rarely produced. His chief varieties are the Mission, Malaga, Tokay and Hamburg. Owens valley may yet prove one of the greatest grape-growing regions on the coast, and still there is yet unclaimed and open for settlement not less than 50,000 ACRES OF PUBLIC LAND.

[Four times this would be nearer the mark.—ED.] Let it not be understood, however, that a poor man can come here and make a living upon it in its present condition except in rare cases. There is an abundance of water for irrigation, but there is very little land unoccupied in reach of the ditches already introduced. In the main it resolves itself into a question of capital. There is room for several colonies, provided they come with sufficient means in the aggregate to supply the amount of water. It is in the power of capital to furnish all that will be wanted for all time at a good rate of interest on the investment, but at the expense of the poor settler ever afterwards, in this respect the objectionable feature to this method. Mr. A. C. Harvey, an intelligent farmer at Lone Pine, makes the suggestion that incorporated companies be formed by citizens and settlers paying a sufficient amount in cash to purchase all the needed machinery for digging a canal, and let out the work by contract to the stockholders, the most of which could be done when they had leasure, and in this way the water right would follow the land without any future cost except an occasional assessment for repair.

It is very evident that something ought to be done to bring this fine body of land under cultivation. Only recently no less than 6,000 acres, taken up under the Desert Land Act, have been canceled by order of the Commissioner. Much of this, as well as many more thousands of acres, is as good as that now under cultivation. Some of it is adapted to all kinds of grain; some for pasture; hay alfalfa and evergreen millet. One more item before closing, overlooked until now. Mr. J. Kispert, nine miles south of Independance, has an acre and one fourth of millet that averages six feet in hight, some stocks measuring eight feet, and has a fine stand. It is doubtful weather a better record is to be found on the coast.

FINAL PROOF.—For notice of intention to make final proof of preemption by John Alexander, see another column.

More Politics.

Like the Irish postilions, who make most of the journey at a rather slow pace, but wind up with a prodigious flourish near the close, having saved their horses 'for a canter on the avenue,' the stumpers have made things lively during the last week. These political prophets are no Jonas, to fly from their divinely oppointed duty. They eagerly seize the opportunity to loudly and vehemently warn the people against delusions, and urge all who are not of their way of thinking to flee from the wrath to come. Like theologians, each politician holds that saivation is to be found only in his fold; he and his are sure of heaven (office) any way, and his only object in preaching his doctrines is to save his dearly beloved fellow creatures (especially voters) from that dread final decree "depart ye into everlasting darkness where there is weeping and wailing and no offices."

A Round Valley correspondent writes that Mr. S. D. Woods made a very acceptable speech there last Tuesday. The building was crowded with people, and the speaker was listened to with the closest attention. The writer of the communication says the address made a strong impression on the audience, and gained Mr. Woods many supporters for the office to which he aspires. When Mr. Woods finished his speech Mrs. Smale and Mr. Tryon sang a number of national songs; the singers were enthusiastiacllly applauded and the audience appeared to enjoy the whole proceedings very heartily. A Bishop Creek correspondent says; "On the evening of the 24th Mr. Thos. J. Goodale entertained the people of this place with a speech on the issues of the day which lasted for two hours. He held his audience well and handled his subjects with surprising ability. If we could only get our local talent out oftener it would conduce greatly to the benefit of Inyo county."

On Wednesday evening Mr. Ayers Superintendent of the State Printing office, made a speech in the Court House here. He recapitulated the story of the Mulligan letters; argued in favor of a large reduction of the tariff; denounced the policy of keeping a large amount of coin in the National Treasury; charged the Republican party with having given away the public lands; declaimed against the condition of the United States navy; denounced the foreign policy of the Republican party, and argued that all the public evils would be remedied by restoring the Democratic party to power. The address was very well received, and upon the conclusion cheers were given for the speaker and the Democratic ticket.

A GOOD MINE.—The perseverance of Mr. John Alexander in developing the White Hill mine is now nearing a rich reward. The mine is so far opened that the ledge is exposed for a long distance and runs from fifteen inches to two and a half feet wide. A small shipment of the ores was recently made to Selby & Co., San Francisco, and yesterday Mr. Alexander received a communication from Mr. Ralston, President of the Smelting Company, who writes; "The ore from the White Hill mine contains 83 ounces per ton of silver, worth $107.31, and 69 per cent of lead. This is splendid ore for smelting, and we will be pleased to get it." Mr. Alexander now has men at work making a good road to the mine, and will sood begin shipping ore.

FROM KEELER.—A Keeler correspondent says: Since the shutting down of the Owens Lake company's mill, which was done last week, the pleasent sound of the stamps and the early morning call of the steam whistle are missed. Nevertheless the town is lively still, and the new hotel is going bravely on to completion. When this building shall be finished it will excell any other hotel in the county in appearence, and under the management of Mr. and Mrs. Barnes will not be less excellent in attractions at table, comfort in rooms and general attention to the wants of guests. In this very essential matter of public accomodation Keeler is a favored town. The late successful run at the mill has added more proof, if that were necessary, that but for a very unfortunate interference the machinery might have been kept in motion during the past year and a half, with profit to the company, and benifit to the whole mining interests of the county.

HEALING WATERS.—That the water of Owens Lake has valuable medecinal properties is too well known at home to need mention; but these properties are now likely to be made known to all the world. This week a car load of fifty empty barrels arrived at Keeler from San Francisco to be filled with water from the Lake and returned to that city. A firm has started a business for the sale of the water, and will extend their correspondence and shipments to the East. By a thorough course of experiments it has been full demonstrated that by a proper systematic use of Owens Lake water very many serious ills that flesh is heir to can be quickly and permanently cured. The result of these experiments has induced the Firm to go into the business. The town of Keeler is likely to be very much hastened in its growth by the establishment of this business. Located on the shore of the Lake, and being at the terminus of of the railroad, the business of freighting and the establishment of bath houses and hotels that may not unreasonably be looked for, when the fame of the water shall spread abroad, Keeler has a bright future.

A COLONY PERHAPS.—Mr. Walker left here yesterday morning, with the expectation of meeting a gentleman at Olancha who proposed to purchase a large tract of land there for the establishment of a colony of Germans. Such colonies are quite sure to be established in Owens valley before long.

DISSOLUTION OF PARTNERSHIP.—The firm of Elkeles & Lasky, doing business at Bishop Creek, has been desolved by mutual consent. See notice on another column.

CHANCE FOR EXCITEMENT.—There is a chance for a new excitement up at Virginia city. The Enterprise says: "Persons who have recently visited the old crater on the west side of Mount Davidson say that the ground at the bottom is sensibly hot to the hand. The same is also said of the old crater above American Flat. The powers of the lower regions appear to be firing up. Well, "turn 'em loose;" the lava from neither of these craters can reach this city."

BEAUTIFUL SPECIMENS.—Yesterday John Alexander brought in a lot of very beautiful specimens of silver and lead ore from the White Hill mine. These specimens are perfect cubs, each large cube composed of many small crystals of metal; but so slender is the cohesion that holds the crystals together, that a slight blow or sudden jar will cause them to fall apart like type. Mr. Alexander left a very fine specimen at the printing office, for which he has many thanks.

Earthquakes.

The most famous earthquake in history was that of 1755, the year "Braddock's army was done so brown," when Lisbon was reduced to a pile of stones and mortar and 30,000 people perished in six minutes. The earth literally opened and gulped her down, for the marble quay, upon which were crowds of people, sank and no trace of them or of the wreck ever reappeared. The shock was felt in New England and the Middle States eighteen days afterward, and was the severest ever experienced in those portions of the country. The earthquake that is said to have occurred on the day of Christ's crucifixion was accompanied by darkness, as was that of January 11, 1835, in Central America. The severest felt anywhere in the United States were those of 1811, spreading over three hundred miles of country in the Mississippi valley, extending from the mouth of the Ohio to that of the St. Francis. They were known as the New Madrid earthquakes, and much of the land depressed at the time by the convulsions of nature is still known as the sunken lands. The shocks were continued several months, the ground rising and sinking like waves, what was a lake one day being a mound the next. They ceased about March 26, 1812, the date of the earthquake in Caracas, Venezuela, when 12,000 people perished and the whole city was destroyed. The old city of Callao was swept away in 1746, and its ruins can be seen of a clear day at the bottom of the present harbor. August 14, 1868, an earthquake wave swept over Arica, Peru, destroying or injuring every house in the place and causing the loss of 300 lives and property to the value of $12,000,000. The United States storeship Fredonia was lost with all hands, and the United States steamer Wateree was carried ashore and left on top of a bluff, where what is left of her still remains. Thousands of lives were lost on the island of Naples in 1857 and many towns destroyed. A similar fate befell the valley of Mexico the next year, June 19, 1858. Quito, in Ecuador, was almost entirely swept away March 22, 1859.

Zulu Hero Worship.

"I was an eye witness of a most interesting and affecting incident," a correspondent writes, "associated with the visit of the late Duke of Wellington to the Zulu exhibition at St. Jame's Hall, when those swarthy-skinned warriors made their appearance in London. His Grace was seated in the front row of reserved seats, and when the Zulus were conducted round by their interpreter the latter explained to them his relationship to the 'Great Duke,' whose equestrian statue they had so much admired before its removal from Decimus Burton's arch. All the party thereupon prostrated themselves at the Duke's feet, which, together with his hands, they devoutly kissed with an amount of reverence I could not have given the swarthy beings credit for the possession of. The Duke was very much affected and seemed quite unable to account for such a display of affection towards him, which, the interpreter explained, was solely due to his being the son of so famous a warrior as his illustrious father."—London World.

The Mosquito's Instrument of Torture.

It appears that in the "bill" of the little beast alone there are no fewer than five distinct surgical instruments. These are described as a lance, two neat saws, a suction pump, and a small Corliss engine. It appears that when a "skeeter" settles down to work on a nice, tender portion of the human frame, the lance is first pushed into the flesh, then the two saws, placed back to back, begin to work up and down to enlarge the hole, and then the pump is inserted, and the victim's blood is siphoned up to the reservoirs carried behind, and finally, to complete the operation, the wretch drops a quantity of poison into the wound to keep it irritated. Then the diminutive fiend takes a fly around just to digest your gore, and makes tracks for a fresh victim, or, if the first has been of unusually good quality, he returns to the same happy hunting-ground. The mosquito's marvelous energy, combined with his portable operating chest, makes him at once a terror and a pest.—London Sportsman.

The National Stockman has this very suggestive horse fact which farmers would do well to remember at this season of the year: "Don't think your horse in best condition to endure a long trip or a hard drive, because he has stood in the stable for weeks and done nothing. If there is ever a time that he is 'soft,' it is after a long idle spell, but many unthinking men do not realize this, and horses of standing and staying qualities are often injured by being brought too suddenly from idleness to hard labor."

Grapes do not grow well in New Zealand in the open air except in a few sheltered situations. The climate is too humid and equable. The winters are too warm to ripen the wood and the summers are not hot enough to mature the fruit. The consequence is that the most of the grapes to be had in the market there must be either imported or grown under glass.

POLITENESS.

One beautiful summer morning,
Sir Bachelor Button said:
"I've single lived for many a year,
And now I think I should wed;
And, in looking over the garden
At the ladies great and small,
It seems to me that Miss Lavender
Is the sweetest one of all.

"And of course 'tis right and proper
That the husband handsomest be;
So pretty, modest Miss Lavender
Will look charmingly with me."
So good Sir Bachelor Button,
To begin his courting new,
Gave his pretty blue clothes a gentle shake,
And washed his face in dew.

But, alas! alas! for his courting!
Just as he was stepping forth,
He met the gallant Sweet William,
Whose home was one door north;
And after a bright "Good-morning!"
Across the garden bed,
"I am going to call on Miss Lavender,"
Were the words Sweet William said.

"Were you, indeed?" asked Bachelor,
"Why, I was going there, too!
But, of course, my dear Sweet William,
I will yield the chance to you."
And, really, he looked quite charming,
In his crimson velvet clothes;
And if blue or crimson Miss Lavender liked,
Is a secret no one knows.

"Not so, not so, Sir Bachelor!"
Sweet William cried with a bow.
Of course I could not think, sir,
Of going to call there now."
So this beautiful summer morning
Each fair knight stood in his door,
And, when he bowed his chance away,
The other but bowed the more.

This was years ago, my children,
In a garden far away;
Yet, waiting still in her little home,
Miss Lavender sits to this day.
And the sun and breeze can tell you,
That, whether wrong or right,
Sir Bachelor and Sweet William
Continue their bowing polite

Women in Switzerland and Bavaria.

In many cases plowing is done with cows hitched up like oxen. A horse and a cow hitched together is not an uncommon sight. In Switzerland and Bavaria women work harder than men: they always do half the work in the fields. It is not uncommon to see women pitching hay to their husbands on high stacks, and carrying mortar up high ladders on their backs. The women always work barefooted and a handkerchief pinned tightly over the heads. Men, the lords of the creation, wear wooden shoes, but their wives never.

Women on farms in Switzerland and Bavaria have no social duties; they never read; the newspaper is unknown. They have no toilets to make. Theirs is a life of brutal work. No slave in the South ever lived so far down in the scale of civilization.

As Bavaria joins Switzerland, I give the essence of a little talk which I had with a Bavarian farmer and his wife, between Geneva and Munich. They were both in the field reaping wheat with a sickle. A barefooted woman was picking up straw in the next field.

"What do you get a month for such work?" I asked.

"We get, both of us together, thirty-two marks ($8.00)," said the man.

"And your board, too?"

"Yes, our food, too.'

"What do you eat every day?" I asked.

"We have flour soup for breakfast, potatoes, bread, and noodles for dinner, and soup and noodles for supper. Twice a week we have salt pork." (Noodles are made of black flour, scalded and dried.)

"Do you have coffee and sugar?"

"None!" they both said, shaking their heads.

The bread they eat is made of rye. In the villages the same bread is fed to the horses. It is a common thing to see a man and horse eating from the same loaf. Girls, working as servants in cities, get about $5.00 a month; and so it is with all the laboring people on farms in Switzerland, France, Germany and Russia. How I should like to have these poor, over-worked women see an American farmer's wife in her sweet home, beautifully carpeted, surrounded with books and papers, and eating meat, and cake, and pies three times a day! The market gardener near Munich and Dresden uses barefooted women to draw his vegetables to market in wagons over the stones. Women become beasts of burden; still, they do not grumble; they do not smile, either—they simply exist. The only liberty they have is liberty to work; the only rest they have is sleep. The existence of a cow or sheep is a perpetual heaven, while theirs is a perpetual hell. Poor European women!—Corr. Minneapolis Tribune.

Foreign Fortune-Hunters.

A New England man of my acquaintance, writes a correspondent of the Boston Commercial Bulletin, whose daughter was traveling in Europe, received word that the daughter had become engaged to be married to a Frenchman reported to be of high social position. In time the father went over to France to assist in completing the marriage. He found on reaching Paris that the bridegroom demanded that there should be a settlement upon him by this father of a large amount of money before he would take the daughter. The father was indignant, and finally succeeded in extricating the daughter from her contract and out of the hands of the French fortune-hunter and getting her home in safety. It is quite well understood in London, Paris, etc., that there are large armies of impecunious young Europeans of pretentious position who are hunting for rich American wives.

I know of a New York man who has a daughter married in Germany to some sort of a German Count, and the German would not take the daughter till the father, who is a man of moderate means, contracted to send the pair over a goodly sum a year as long as he lived and provide for them at his death. This is the way things are done on the other side of the water.

TO WOOD-BE RUNAWAYS.

Boyish Aspirants for Greater Glories Than They Have at Home.

Come, now, my lad, but you want to run away. No boy ever yet reached the age of fifteen without having several times firmly made up his mind to leave home. When a boy has made up his mind to do a thing of this sort, he ought to carry it out by all means. The first step in the programme is to begin saving up bread and meat. When you have a bushel or so of provisions hidden in the barn, or under the woodshed, you are ready for the battle with the cold world. Make your start at night. This will prevent the sun from tanning your complexion, and you will be quite certain of the company of a tramp or two.

Some boys leave a note pinned to the pillow of their bed. This note goes on to say that the boy has been jawed, bulldosed, starved, hounded, and knocked down, and dragged out until he has made up his mind to sever the connection. He will never be heard of more. It is probably the best way to leave a note of this kind, as the family are then made to fully realize their cruelty in driving the poor boy out among strangers.

When you have packed up your little bundle and are off, it will be well to settle upon some plan for the future. Perhaps you want to be a sailor? Nothing is easier. Make your way to some lake or seaport, and most any captain will take you. If he can't disgust you with the sailoring business in about a week, tar buckets, seasickness, poor provisions, and a rope's end will be called upon to assist him.

Perhaps you want to become a mighty hunter? Mighty hunters are not made in a few days or weeks. You want to begin by letting your hair and finger-nails grow, sleeping in a swamp, and wasting $20.00 worth of ammunition to kill a ten-cent chipmunk.

If you have decided to become a bank clerk, well and good. Make tracks for the nearest city, and the first bank you enter will jump at the chance of employing you at a salary of $200 per month. If it should so happen that the bank didn't do any jumping as you made your application, you can console yourself with the reflection that it is about to bust.

But, speaking in all seriousness, my boy, if I had a dozen sons, I should be glad to have each and every one of them take his turn at running away from home. It is the best cure in the world for that disease called "swelled head." There is a heap of romance in the idea of running away. You think of the sparkling sea, the green prairies, coral strands, robber's caves, and pirate's treasures. You feel that you know so much more than your father that it is a waste of brains for both of you to remain in the same house. You have been forced to go to school, and have been ordered to split wood and go to the grocery store after butter like a common slave. Don't stand it any longer! Pick up your duds and leave the house and go forth into the world.

What! Come to a full stop in the road before you are a mile away! You've got a peck or more of sour meat and moldy bread in a pillow-case, seventeen cents in your pocket, and just think how your father and mother have misused you at home! The romance begins to wear off, eh? You don't care half as much about mermaids and palm groves and pirate ships as you did an hour ago. You hate to leave mother, after all, and perhaps father isn't so much to blame for bossing you around. Come to think it all over, perhaps you'd better return home and try to stand it for a few more weeks.

Ah! my son, but we've all been there! All these wrinkled and dignified and baldheaded old men you meet on the streets have had about the same experience. We've had that same period of "swell-head;" Eight out of ten of us have packed our bundles and slid out to escape parental tyranny. Eight out of ten of us have slipped back again, too, and the experience was the right sort of medicine for the disease. Any time that you come to feel that you are a poor, overworked and down-trodden boy, and that if you only had a fair show you'd know more in a minute than your father does in an hour, just skip. There's nothing like it.—Detroit Free Press.

Distance to the Sun.

As to the distance, 93,000,000 miles, a cannon-ball would travel it in about fifteen years. It may help us to remember that ⅔ the speed attained by the limited express on our railroads a train which had left the sun for the earth when the Mayflower sailed from Delfhaven with the Pilgrim Fathers, which ran at that rate day and night, would in 1884 still be a journey of some years away from its terrestrial station. The fare, at the customary rates, it may be remarked, would be rather over $2,500,000, so that it is clear that we should need both money and leisure for the journey. Perhaps the most striking illustration of the sun's distance is given by expressing it in terms of what the physiologists would call velocity of nerve transmission. It has been found that sensation is not absolutely instantaneous, but that it occupies a very minute time in traveling along the nerves; so that if a child puts its finger into the candle, there is a certain almost inconceivably small space of time, say the one-hundredth of a second, before he feels the heat. In case, then, a child's arm were long enough to touch the sun, it can be calculated from this know rate of transmission that the infant would have to live to be a man of over one hundred before it knew that its fingers were burned.—Prof. Langley, in September Century.

Their Summer Jottings.

Four bright young ladies, representing Cincinnati, New Orleans, St. Louis, and Chicago, have agreed to write down their various experience at summer resorts this year, and at the close of the season give their diaries to a prominent correspondent.—Inter-Ocean.

Treatment of Wheat.

Several farmers in Western Missouri recently asked R. T. Davis, a prominent miller in St. Joseph, to answer the following inquiries: Should wheat go through the sweat in the stack, or should it be threshed from the stack and go through the sweat in the bin or granary? Which is most favorable for the best quality of wheat for market and milling purposes? Also, at what state of ripeness should wheat be harvested? How long should it remain in the shock before stacking or threshing? Does not the sun, with or without rain, injure wheat while standing, or while in shock, by bleaching?

He replied to their inquiries as follows: My experience in handling wheat is that there is great danger of cutting when too green, also danger of letting it stand too long. Wheat ripens from the core of the grain out, and if cut when the grain is in milk, next to the bran of the grain, the milky substance will recede and the bran settle back to that portion of the berry that has matured; consequently the grain will be shriveled and the bran heavy from the milk adhering to it. But if harvested when the substance next to the bran is in a doughy state, the grain will not diminish, but retain its full size, and the substance then left in the stalk will still continue to flow to the head and thoroughly mature the grain after being put in stack.

This reaction of new life, as it may be called, in the stalk, generally sets in about ten days after the wheat is put in the stack, and is called by the farmers in the sweat, which causes a great change in the grain. It fills out to the full size of the formation of the berry, and changes the color of the berry to a beautiful red, with yellow tint. Therefore, I think the proper time to cut wheat is when the substance next the bran is in the dough, and that wheat invariably should be stacked and allowed to retain its natural connection with the stalk until it has gone through the sweat. Wheat will go through this change whether in the stack or bin, and if disconnected from the stalk while in the sweat, it fails to receive the nutriment from the sweat in the stack, and it will turn to a dark, dingy, dead red color, and appear lifeless. The bran will be rough and heavy, and, in my opinion, will lower the wheat in the market a full grade.

Your question: "Does the sun injure wheat with or without rain, while in the shock before reaping?" My experience is that it does, very materially, but much more when it is rained on than when it is only subject to the dew. The dampness, whether from dew or rain, softens the berry, and the hot sun on the berry in this condition bleaches it and extracts greatly from its substance. In many instances it becomes almost worthless to the manufacturers. I have known wheat to lose in weight by exposure from three to five pounds per bushel; besides, it almost completely destroys its strength. As to length of time it should remain in the shock before stacking, this depends greatly upon the state of the weather. If the weather is dry, four or five days is as long as it should be exposed to the hot sun; but if the weather is damp, it must not be put into the stack until the blades on the stalk are thoroughly dry. It is not the stalk that molds and heats in the stack, but the blades and roots that cover the stalk.

As to the length of time necessary for wheat to go through the sweat in the stack, I will say this depends greatly upon the state of the weather. If the weather is very dry and the wheat dry when put in the stack, it will not commence the sweat as early as it will in damp weather. It generally takes from three to five weeks for it to get through the sweat after it commences. I am very much opposed to threshing wheat out of the shock. It will go through the sweat whether in stack, bin, or in the flour. I am satisfied that there is more wheat spoiled by threshing out of the shock and binning it up in this green condition than by all other means combined.—Northwestern Miller.

"God Bless the Baby!"

A big man and a smaller one went into Mr. Harrington's store last night and asked to look at some clothing. Mr. Harrington himself waited upon the visitors, and was showing them various lines of goods, when the door leading to his residence in the rear of the store opened, and in came on the run a baby daughter of the Harrington family. The little one came in hurrying to escape her mother, and fell over a box. Mr. Harrington left the customer and went to the rescue of the baby. After the little one was quieted and placed on the floor he resumed his business, but in a minute she fell over another box, and apparently hurt herself. He left the customer, and again looked after the child.

At this the man turned to his companion and said: "Let's go out of here. I ain't looking for a nursery.

The proprietor heard the remark and was not slow to respond. He said that he had lived fifty-two years and done twenty years of business, and had had 20,000 customers, but he had never had but two Harrington babies, and this was the only one left. He could get along without the customer and the sale of a suit of clothes to him, but he couldn't get along without the Harrington baby, and he didn't care how soon the customer "skipped."

The man, who was looking at the proprietor with a mild astonishment at first, when the story was finished, had his handkerchief out, was wiping his eyes, and, reaching his hand out to Mr. Harrington, exclaimed, "Partner, God bless the baby!" He couldn't do too much, and it is needless to say they parted as friends.—Cheyenne (Wy. T.) Sun.

The Poultry World says that the difference between an egg laid by a plump, healthy hen, fed with good, fresh food daily, and an egg laid by a thin, poorly fed hen, is as great as the difference between good beef and poor.

Miss Faithfull on Women.

Miss Emily Faithfull, who has recently returned from America to England, has been giving her impressions of this country to the English press. The position of women in this country is to her the most interesting study. She thinks the field open to women in this country is much broader than in England, and that American women employed are, as a rule, proud of the fact that they can earn their own living. She complains that English women are ashamed when compelled to earn their daily bread, some going so far as to give false names to their shopmates and employers. She says, further:—

"Fine-ladyism is creeping in, no doubt, but it has not yet attained that universality which it enjoys in England. America, however, is unquestionably the paradise for married women, nor is there any country in the world in which the husbands are so good, so kind, and so affectionate as in the States. In fact, they spoil their wives. It is the most amusing thing in the world to see how the American woman imposes upon her husband the duties of housewifery." Of this Miss Faithfull mentions an amusing instance which came under her own notice in a New York mansion. "'There will be sixteen for dinner to-night,' said the wife to her husband as he was going out to business in the morning. 'Dear me!' said the husband; 'what shall I order for dinner?' 'What a question!' said she, contemptuously; 'there has been no new animal invented, surely. If I tell you how many are coming you can provide for them, I suppose.' He acquiesced without a murmur, and obediently ordered the dinner. In railway carriages the wife lolls at her ease, surrounded by cheap novels, while the husband nurses the children and supplies all their wants. Domestic service in America is much worse than in this country. There are very few houses indeed, even among the wealthiest Americans, which have a housekeeper, and houses which in this country would have four or five servants are managed in America by two. The servants have to do all kinds of work, and although there may be an opening for our 'generals,' or maids-of-all-work, the English servant accustomed to good places in this country would not tolerate the condition of domestic servants in the States. As the service itself is more onerous, the servants are much less pleasant to do with than English servants. There is a great demand for domestic servants, especially in the West; but anything more wicked than inviting servant-girls, without friends and without organization, to make their way to the Far West, is difficult to imagine." Miss Faithfull is organizing a system by which the surplus women of this country can emigrate under friendly auspices to those centers of population in the States where the demand for English domestic servants is greatest. There is also a great demand for eligible maidens for matrimonial purposes. Not in the East, however, where the matrimonial market is sadly overstocked, but in the West.

"There are a hundred female doctors in America for one in this country; in every town there are at least a dozen, who have a large practice, chiefly among women and children; but they do not refuse male patients when they can get them. The chief objection to female doctors on the part of women it that they are too hard and unsympathetic. With men the lady doctor may relax somewhat; but in dealing with their own sex their peculiar charm disappears. In one university Miss Faithfull found as many as sixty medical students studying for their degree, but in that college the anatomical classes were not attended by both sexes at the same time. In Boston, however, there is a university at which male and female students go through all their studies in common, the dissecting-room being occupied at the same time by both sexes—a custom which is more honored in the breach than in the observance. Thousands of women are employed in the United States as clerks, and the standard of commercial morality is exceedingly high, no case of embezzlement having been reported on the part of women cashiers. The teaching profession in America is largely in the hands of women, a 'school-marm' being one of the most distinctive features of American civilization, their skill in managing even the roughest boys being very remarkable."

Young Ladies as Ushers.

A vision of loveliness in blonde bangs stood in the aisle, a soft, feminine voice said: "Permit me to show you a seat," and the next minute she had taken the checks and was gracefully leading the way to the chairs in the orchestra circle. She was one of the new lady ushers at the Third Avenue Theater, and it was her first appearance in that role. If she and her four companions prove satisfactory, the theater will say good-bye forever to male ushers. And last night's experiments settled their fate. The ladies were so immeasurably superior to the black-coated men that they were permanently engaged, and from to-morrow evening all visitors will be shown to their seats by soft-voiced sirens. With a glance at the checks she of the center aisle turned leisurely toward the seats, giving one ample time to follow her movements. It was a strange experience, and involuntarily the feeling grew upon the audience that they were in church. A score of regular church-goers were pointed out, fumbling in their pockets for plugged nickels and suspender buttons for the collection. As the evening wore on the devotional feeling grew and was fostered by the usher-girls. They did not seize checks and gallop off at a pace that would put Maud S. to a blush. There were no scenes of strong men, clutching a hat in one hand and a lady's arm in the other, wildly chasing a flying usher down the aisles and through intricate labyrinths of seats. The costumes were all alike,—a plain black alpaca, long white apron and fluted bib, with a coquettish little Norman cap perched just above the bangs.—N. Y.

A Strange Reminiscence.

We find in "Figures of the Past," by Josiah Quincy, in an account of the establishment of railroads in Massachusetts about the year 1838, an experience which reads strangely to us who hear of colored senators and read in the reports of National Conventions not only the speeches of colored delegates from all portions of the South, but also that from among the number one should be appointed chairman pro tem of such a body. It has also seemed strange to many Northerners that Southern people who had become accustomed to much nearer personal relations to colored people than we were at the North, having their nurses sit alongside of the mistresses in their carriages, often having them sleep on mattresses in their rooms, having them about them at the table, and with their children everywhere, should have been so averse to allowing colored persons in public conveyances, as is here described.

Josiah Quincy writes: "There is one question which could not be avoided after the establishment of railroads: 'What are the rights of negroes in respect to this new mode of locomotion?' And the general voice of the community replied in usual chorus, 'Neither here nor elsewhere have they any rights which the white man is bound to respect.'

"The prejudice against persons of color can be but faintly realized at the present time.

"No public conveyance would carry them, no hotel would receive them, except as servants to a white master. The day in May when our State Government was organized, was universally called 'Nigger 'Lection,' because on that day negroes were accorded the privilege of appearing on the common; whereas, if one of this class of citizens presumed to enter the common on unartillery election, he was liable to be pursued and stoned by a crowd of roughs and boys. After the Providence railroad opened the shortest way to New York, it was found that an appreciable number of the despised race demanded transportation. Scenes of riot and violence took place, and in the then existing state of opinion it seemed that the difficulty could best be met by assigning a special car to our colored citizens. Some of our cars were then arranged like the old stage-coaches—there being three compartments upon a truck. These coaches communicated only by a small window at the top, and one of these I assigned for the exclusive use of colored persons. One morning at Providence I entered the middle carriage, and was attracted by voices in the next division,—that allotted to travelers of the black race. I arose and looked through the little window just mentioned, and saw a Southern gentleman had entered the compartment, which was occupied by a well-dressed negro who wore spectacles. The Southerner was evidently much excited finding a negro taking his ease in a first-class carriage. There had been some words between them which I did not perfectly hear. What I did hear was this:—

"Southerner—'You black rascal, so you are a voter here, are you?'

"Negro—'Yes, I am a free citizen and a voter.'

"So.—'Well, I have taken just such fellows as you, and tied them up by their thumbs and whipped them until the blood ran down to their heels.'

"N.—'Then sir, you shed your brother's blood.'

"So.—'Why you — nigger, you don't mean to say that I'm your brother.'

"N.—'Yes, for it is written, "He made of one blood all nations of men to dwell on the face of the earth."'

"The effect of this quotation was as the last straw upon the burdened camel. It fairly broke the patience of the knightly personage who had entered the carriage. He instantly sprang upon the negro, catching him by the collar; and almost as quickly, I entered the compartment and ordered him to desist.

"'Well, who are you?' said the assailant, with a mighty oath. I replied that I was the president of the road and would see that he was arrested if he did not immediately leave the carriage; and having said this, I added a few words of measureless contempt for his conduct. Muttering some profanity, the man left the compartment, while I called the conductor to show him to the proper coach. At that time the trains made quite a stop at Mansfield, during which most of the passengers left the cars. I was standing upon the platform of that way-station, when the Southerner approached me with a beaming face and all the suavity of manner which was characteristic of slaveholders when on their good behavior at the North. He gracefully apologized for his conduct, saying he was not accustomed to seeing negroes treated as white persons, and the sudden introduction to such a spectacle had caused an excitement which he was unable to control. Before he had finished speaking we were joined by the negro, who, in a manner no less gentlemanly, thanked me for my interference, and producing a handsome pocketbook, offered me his card. The amazement with which the gentleman from the South regarded this proceeding is altogether indescribable. His blank and helpless astonishment was of the sort which might be succeeded by a burst of indignation or a burst of laughter. Fortunately the comic side of this latter day warning at length succeeded in making itself predominant.

"'Well, take me home!' he said 'I've seen all I came for. Spectacles were good; but a nigger with a visiting card! It just knocks me down and makes me as weak as a baby. A nigger with a visiting card! Well, I am surely dreaming and that's a fact.'"

"The above illustration," adds Mr. Quincy in his diary, "is an extreme illustration of a state of feeling which has happily passed away."

In Berlin there has been started a restaurant bearing as its title, "Erste Berliner Rossfleisch und Wurst-Ess-Stube." As the name indicates, horseflesh is the chief refreshment offered, and a "beef steak" of horse, with potatoes, is supplied for the very moderate sum of two pence.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 8, ...1884.

BANDS of music paraded the streets of Virginia City from morning till night on election day.

IN Esmeralda county, Nevada, A. G. McAfee has been elected to the Assembly by a large majority.

GOVERNOR STONEMAN lost his vote on election day. He did not know enough to get registered in time.

NEVADA is claimed by Republicans by a majority of 1,100 for Blaine and Logan. Cassidy has been defeated by Woodburn for Congress.

LAST Monday was pay day at Virginia City. The Enterprise says the amount paid out to workmen at the several mines would exceed $100,000.

IN Inyo county the election passed off very quietly. Republicans scratched viciously on county officers, but gave a little over the usual majority for the head of the ticket.

OVER 1,000 colored voters were arrested on election day in the first Louisiana Congressional district, charged with being "dangerous persons," and were locked up until after the election.

P. J. Fields came down from Benton to cast his maiden vote at Independence. In the absence of that excuse for the trip he would have made another, as there being a maiden in the case.

IT is reported that Eli Johnson has sold his copper mine at Santa Fé, Esmeralda county, Nevada, to some New York parties for $15,000, and that the money was paid over in Hawthorne on Thursday of last week.

The Calumet and Hecla copper mine at Lake Superior can produce copper cheaper than any other mine known, it is estimated that the company can lay down copper at the seaboard for about seven cents per pound.

LATEST reports from Mono give Markham 485 Del Valle 321. A few small precincts were yet to hear from. For Superior Judge the count so far gave Briggs 449, Hakes 403. For Sheriff, McKinney 445, Loose, 319.

PROHIBITION tickets were offered in Inyo county at Bishop Creek only. There were but seven votes cast, Part of the tickets offered had the names of Democratic candidnates for county officers, and an equal number had the names of the Republican candidates.

THE Tuscarora Times-Review says: One of the blocks of ore recently taken from the Navajo mine has been sawed in two. The saw worked as smoothly and encountered as little grit as it would in passing through a bar of bullion. The entire surfaces presented are pure horn silver.

THE Congressional vote in Nevada is very close. The Reno Gazette says: Humboldt county gives Cassidy about 200 majority, Eureka, 250, and Elko, 200. Washoe gives Woodburn 150 majority, Ormsby 170, and Storey about 500. Woodburn is undoubtedly ahead.

Two men were killed at the polls in Chicago on election day. A dispatch from Indianapolis says: At Fairland, Shelby county, when the polls were opened this morning an armed mob of Democrats captured the polls and drove the Republicans away with clubs and revolvers. John Smith, Henry Smith, and other leading Republicans were knocked down and beaten, and all fled for their lives.

FIFTY precincts in the 1st Congressional District of California give Carothers (R) 2,667, Henley (D) 2,720. Sixty-two precincts in 2d district give Loutitt (R) 4,242, Sumner (D) 3,476. Forty-one precincts in the 3d district give McKenna (R) 4,779, Glascock (D) 4,004. Twenty-three precincts of the 5th district give Felton (R) 3,391; Sullivan (D) 2,495. Forty-four precincts in the 6th district give Markham (R) 2,910; Del Valle (D) 2,860.

A CERTAIN ruffian element at Lundy made threats of violence against the editor of the Homer Index for exposing their villany. Mr. Ginn has not been deterred from his duty by these threats; he has denounced the villains by name, dared them to do their worst, and continues to make war upon them. All good citizens will stand by the editor in his efforts for the maintenance of law and order against robbers and assassins.

ITALIAN vineyard owners propose a method by which the properties of grape juice can be concentrated. The water is to be artificially withdrawn in such a manner as to leave a residue, which contains all the possibilities of wine, and which can be turned into wine in places where the art of wine-making is rightly understood. The condensed substances will keep for years. The excellence of wine so made was recognized at the Bordeaux Exhibition in 1882.

The Express claims that 500 fraudulent entries were discovered on the Great Register in Los Angeles.

QUITE a number of arrests for illegal voting were made in San Francisco on election day. Chris Buckley was the leader and promoter of the crime.

NEARLY 48,000 votes were cast in San Francisco on election day. To count them was the work of several days, as a great deal of scratching had been done. The latest returns favored the reelection of Bartlett, Democrat, for Mayor.

FOR Supervisors, up to date, it is only certain that J. D. Blair has been elected in the Third district. It is probable that J. D. Harger has been elected in the First; George Stevens in the Second; Thomas Boland in the Fourth, and J. C. Eddy in the Fifth.

ENGLISHMEN are appointed to rule Ireland, while the most important English positions abroad, both civil and military, are filled by Irishmen. It is a contistency, that Irishmen should be recoginized by the English Government as possessing the best talent for government and command, and receive the highest appointments in all countries but their own.

The San Francisco Bulletin says; From present indications the Congressmen elected yesterday are the following:

First district—T. L. Carothers, R., probably.

Second—J. A. Louttit, R.

Third—Joseph McKenna, R.

Forth—In doubt.

Fifth—C. N. Felton, R., probably.

Sixth—In doubt.

THE Chronicle makes the following estimate of the result of the election, but the reliability of the data on which the estimate is made is not very certain: "The electoral votes, about which there is little or no doubt at this writing, will be cast as follows: For Blaine—Nevada 3, New York 36, Colorado 3, Illinois 22, Iowa 13, Kansas 9, Maine 6, Massachusetts 14, Michigan 13, Minnesota 7, Nebraska 5, New Hampshire 4, Ohio 23, Oregon 3, Pennsylvania 30, Rhode Island 4, Vermont 4, Wisconsin 11, California 8, Indiana 15; total 233. For Cleveland: Alabama 10, Arkansas 7, Delaware 3, Florida 4, Georgia 12, Kentucky 13, Louisiana 8, Maryland 8, Mississippi 9, Missouri 16, North Carolina 11, South Carolina 9, Tennessee 12, Texas 13, Virginia 12, West Virginia 6; total 153. Doubtful: Connecticut 6, New Jersey 9; total 15. As only 201 votes in the Electoral College are necessary to a choice, Blaine is elected, with several votes to spare."

THE following is the text of Amendment No. 2, voted on by the people of this State at the election Tuesday last: "The Governor, Superintendent of Public Instruction and the principals of the State Board of Education, and shall compile, or cause to be compiled, and adopt a uniform series of text-books for use in common schools throughout the State. The State Board may cause such text-books, when adopted, to be printed and published by the Superintendent of State Printing at the State Printing Office, and when so printed and published, to be distributed and sold at the cost price of printing, publishing and distributing the same. The text books so adopted shall continue in use not less than four years; and said State Board shall perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law. The Legislature shall provide for a Board of Education in each county in the State. The County Superintendent, and the County Boards of Education shall have control of the examination of teachers and the granting of teachers' certificates within their respective jurisdictions."

CLAWSON, the Mormon convicted of bigamy at Salt Lake, made the following speech before being sentenced: "Your Honor, since the jury that sat on my case have seen proper to find a verdict of guilty, I have only this to say why judgment should not be pronounced. I very much regret that the laws of my country should come in contact with the laws of God, but whenever they do, I shall invariably choose the latter. If I did not so express myself, I should feel unworthy of the cause I represent. The Constitution of the United States expressly states that Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof. It cannot be denied, I think, that marriage, when amended and sanctioned by religious rites and ceremonies, is an ordinance of religion. The law of 1862 and the Edmunds law were expressly designed to operate against marriage as practiced and believed by the Latter-Day Saints; they are, therefore, unconstitutional and of course cannot command the respect that a constitutional law would. That is all I have to say to your Honor.' When Clawson concluded his speech, Judge Zane said he had thought to pass a light sentence upon him, but he could not now. A defiant criminal was not entitled to leniency. He therefore sentenced him to four years' hard labor in the penitentiary and to pay a fine of $800. Notice of appeal was then given by Clawson's counsel, and a motion was made to release him on bail, pending the determination of the case in the higher courts. This was denied by the Judge, and Clawson was remanded to the custody of the United States Marshal.

ELECTION reports as given in eastern papers are of no value. The vote is very much larger than ever before; more scratching was done than usual, consequently the work of counting was very slow. Nearly all of the eastern papers are partison, and each claims the success of its favorite candidate. The New York Herald, World, Times, Tribune, Evening Post, and other leading papers each asserts with equal confidence that its favorite has certainly been elected. There was no break in the solid South, with the possible exception of Old Virginia, which is climed by both sides. The vote was running very close according to the last returns, with the prospect in favor of the Republicans. All the other Southern States gave large majorities for Cleveland, and in the greater number nearly solid Democratic delegations were returned were to Congress. Several of the congressmen elect are in favor of protection.

At latest reports the result of the election in New York was still uncertain, and upon the result there the election of President depends. The vote is the largest ever polled in the State, and by far the closest. The long continued uncertainty, and the violent fluctuation of feeling from exultation to despondency, as returns were received from different places, one giving the victory to Cleveland, and the next changing it to Blaine, were beginning to produce a bad effect upon the excited people. A dangerous condition of irritation, and even anger and sullenness began to be evident; and some apprehension was felt that a violent explosion of feeling might break out at any moment in riot and bloodshed. The best assurance against such a deplorable calamity, is to convince the people that their will as expressed through the ballot box, shall be obeyed. In no northern state at least, was a single voter hindered from voting as he pleased; and till time and more enlightenment shall secure like freedom to voters in all parts of the Union, a majority of votes should, and no doubt will, determine the result in Presidential elections. The day has passed when any great number of citizens of the county would willingly destroy the Union or the Government. The successful candidate is sure to be a loyal citizen of the United States, who has an equal interest in the prosperity of his country and the happiness of his countrymen, with all other citizens, and would not knowingly and wilfully do any thing to mar that prosperity or prevent that happiness. Whatever measures might follow a change of administration, caused by different views of the wisdom or folly of certain lines of policy, should ill effects be produced by those measures, the very men who promote them could be safely depended upon to change them when convinced of their error. Lawful provision is made for the settlement of all electoral matters, and the good sense of the people, their respect for and adherence to their own laws, may be trusted to settle all such matters peacefully.

Illegal Fees in United States Courts.

WASHINGTON, September 7th.—Attorney-General Brewster has been giving United States Marshals, District Attorneys, and Clerks of District and Circuit Courts a lot of trouble, despite the fact that he appears to have been encamped for the summer at Long Branch. The weather has not prevented the agents of the Department of Justice from making unpleasant inquiries in regard to fees and court expenses, in the South and West particularly. The reports of these Inspectors will not be made public until the Attorney-General submits his annual report to the President in December, but it is known that scarcely an official connected with the administration of justice in the South and the Territories will escape severe arraignment for extravagance, extortion, and fraud. Some United States Judges do not feel altogether easy with reference to these reports. The bills of Clerks and Commissioners are supposed to be examined by the Judges before they are allowed, and it will be difficult to explain why some practices have not long ago been detected and put a stop to. One Circuit Judge was visited by an Inspector, recently, to see if the statement of a Clerk of his Court, in regard to fees allowed, was correct. The Clerk had for years charged for making certain records in criminal cases. The Inspector found no such records had been made, although thousands of dollars had been received upon bills in which the folios for each case had apparently been calculated and charged for. The Clerk asserted that the Circuit Judge passed these bills, knowing that the work charged for had never been performed. The Judge informed the Inspector that the Clerk's statement was true; that he did not consider it necessary that the record in question should be kept, and that he did regard the charge for it as a legitimate perquisite of the Clerk's office. In other cases witness fees have been allowed with the consent of the Judges, for days spent in going to and returning from Court. Allowances for guards, in Marshals' accounts, when none were used, swelled to a high figure with false charges, have been passed by Judges who say the least, were very negligent

There are seventeen quinine factories in the world—six in Germany, four in America, three in France, two in Italy, and two in England. The annual production amounts to about 4,250,000 ounces.

EARTHQUAKES.

Forces Supposed to be at Work Thirty Miles Beneath us.

Prof. G. H. Merriman, of Rutgers College, New Brunswick, has made the crust of the earth a study, and has written on the subject. He says:

"While facts enough regarding the extent of the earthquake of Sunday have not come to hand to enable me to speak on the direction of the earth wave or its peculiar features as compared with other earthquakes, yet something may be said as to the latest convictions of students of science on the nature of the earth below the point any man can penetrate. That may lead us to guess intelligently at the cause of earthquakes.

"You know the long received theory of the nature of the interior of the earth was that it is a molten mass, and that we move around on a crust enveloping the earth and caused by the cooling off of this mass on the inside. It is undoubtedly true that about thirty miles below the earth's surface the temperature is so high that everything is in a melted condition. We know this, because we have learned that every fifty feet we penetrate into the earth there is an increase of temperature of about one degree, and at a distance of thirty miles the heat is so great that any substance we know of would melt. Perhaps the melted mass is in the form of a liquid. That would be certain but for the immense pressure on it. The pressure is estimated at 10,000 tons on a square foot. Of course scientific men cannot experiment with matters at a high temperature with a pressure of 10,000 tons to a square foot, so we can only guess what may be its condition. In talking about this melted mass thirty miles under us the term water substance is used by geologist.

"How great is the distance through this water substance we do not know, but it is certain that its density increases more, and more, gradually, until the interior of the earth is solid, probably, from the inconceivable pressure 1,000, 2,000 or 3,000 miles from the surface. Sir William Thompton has demonstrated that the earth must have a core much denser than the land and water we live on. He points out the fact that if a shell only thirty miles thick surrounding a molten liquid mass extending from one side of the earth through the center to the other side, then the moon, through the law of gravitation, would displace the liquid or gass in the interior of the earth to such an extent that the earth's crust would bulge out in the direction of the moon, making a tide in the solid crust of the earth, as certainly as the skin of an orange bulges out when you squeeze the fruit between the palms of your hands. And this would be evident to us because the ocean tides would be almost, if not quite, imperceptiable to us. To withstand the attraction of the moon, the earth, Sir. William says, must be as rigid as steel.

"So we have the theory that the crust of the earth floats on and imposes an immense weight on a water substance, which is inconceivably hot. Now, as to the way an earthquake may be caused. Suppose moisture trickled gradually, year after year, through this crust into a heated mass. In our atmosphere steam would be produced. Thirty miles below us the pressure is so great that it is not likely that steam could be generated. One thing, though; the pressure of 10,000 tons to the square foot, a pressure exerted in every direction, would be increased. Some effect must be produced down there, and it is easy to see that if one place in the earth's crust is weaker than another region where the water trickled in, then 'the weakest place must stand the strain. It is not unreasonable to suppose that this pressure below might be so great that the earth's covering was shafted a little to adapt itself to the pressure from below. This shifting of the crust is, in fact, the earthquake.

"I believe this theory has the greater reason on its side, because earthquakes are almost always in the region of volcanoes, and volcanoes are almost always in or near the ocean.

"Another theory of earthquakes is that as the earth is very gradually cooling off the crust is thickening on the under side, and cracks or fissures on the under side of the crust many miles deep may occur in consequence of the enormous pressure, so that the water substance rushes into a new position with a force that would knock a continent out of shape if it took place on the earth's surface. The motion would be sufficient to produce a vibration thirty miles distant.

"Whatever the cause of the earthquake on Sunday," added Prof. Merriman, "I think the earth in the region where it took place has either settled into a new position or is forced back into an old position from which it was pushed by former earthquakes."

Sleep.

Men who are the fastest asleep when they are asleep, are the widest awake when they are awake.

Great workers must be great resters.

Every man who has clerks in his employ ought to know what their sleeping habits are. The young man who is up till 2, 3 and 4 o'clock in the morning, and must put in an appearance at the bank or store at 9 or 10 o'clock and work all the day, cannot repeat this process many days without a certain shakiness coming into his system, which he will endeavor to steady by some delusive stimulus. It is in this way that many a young man begins his course to ruin. He need not necessarily have been in bad company. He has lost his sleep, and losing sleep is losing strength and grace.

Lime slaked with a solution of salt in water, and then properly thinned with skim milk from which all the cream has been taken, makes a permanent white-wash for outdoor work, and, it is said, renders the wood incombustible. It is an excellent wash for preserving wood and for all farm purposes.

Political Activity Among Workingmen.

The New York correspondent of the San Francisco Bulletin has been noticing this interesting feature of the campaign, and thus discourses upon the subject:—

"It has already been a matter of note that the workingman, as a political power, is coming to the front in this campaign in a manner wholly unlooked for and somewhat bewildering to the old-fashioned politician. I do not remember in any previous campaign to have seen the workingman—not only the highly-paid mechanic, but the common day-laborer—take so serious an interest in political matters and really discuss with some intelligence political questions bearing upon his own welfare. The tendency has long been in this direction, but the agitation seems to have suddenly borne fruit. My friend, Robert Blissert, who is peculiar among labor agitators, in that he works as hard as he talks, tells me that the new dawn has broken; that the workingman will no longer be content to work from early morning until late at night, to go home in his working-clothes, to devour his coarse food, and to slink off to bed utterly exhausted and needing the whole night for recuperation against another day's toil. It may have been noticed that Butler, in his Letter of Acceptance, speaks of having worked hard in early youth at reducing the ordinary hours of labor from fourteen to eleven, and, later on, to ten hours a day. Now the cry is for eight hours, and Blissert believes that the burning question of future campaigns will be more or less of an effort to shorten the hours of labor, and prohibit, if prohibition is necessary, a man from working, as a regular thing, for more than six hours in a day, or less. When the dinner was given two months ago to Henry George, Blissert appeared there with a number of other tailors, many of his own trade, all exceedingly well dressed, and discussed with great intelligence such topics of the evening as were gossiped about during the dinner. I was not a little surprised upon making inquiries concerning the hours of work of these tailors, to learn that a regular society exists in New York, the salient feature of which is that the members shall bind themselves not to work more than six hours a day, and to devote at least one hour to study of some kind. The well-dressed tailors who appeared at the George dinner were members of this society. These men believe that the average workingman, if allowed a certain number of hours every day for the purpose of self-improvement, will not only do as much work as he did before, but will do it better and will be a far more valuable member of society and able the better to bring up his children. They contend that the truth of the maxim, "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," is perfectly illustrated in the condition of the average workingman of the country. It is all work and no play with a vengeance so far as most of our workingmen are concerned.

"This is but one instance of several which I could mention, showing the unusual interest which the workingmen are taking in this campaign. These men have at heart the object of shortening the hours of labor, and they scrutinize every political movement in order to see how and where this object may be forwarded. I understand that Ben Butler has been led to take the stump so actively in his own behalf by the knowledge that workingmen are more disposed than ever before to step out for themselves this year. Blissert believes—and he is one of Ben Butler's chief lieutenants in this city—that Butler has this view of the matter strongly impressed upon him, and that should he fail, as he is almost certain to do, of an election this fall, he will devote the next four years to the organization of a labor party having for war-cry this old hobby of his of reducing the hours of labor. I was much amused, by the way, to find that Blissert himself keeps his own journeyman tailors hard at work ten hours a day, but he excuses himself upon the ground that he has to do it so long as other manufacturing tailors work their men ten hours a day. It would be interesting to find out when Butler begins his campaign in favor of short hours, how many hours a day he makes his mill people work, as he has a great many hands employed in making banting."

There is not much advantage in cutting green corn for soiling until it approaches the blossoming stage. Before this time stock will eat it, but it is watery and innutritious.

In opium-joints and hasheesh-houses, tea or water acidulated with aconite is used to heighten the effect of the drug upon the nerves and brain. This is almost the same excitant that was used by the New England witches, according to Prof. Schele de Vere.

Cyclonia is the name given to an Indiana baby born during the frightful cyclone in Jamaica two years ago, which swept away villages and forests. The house in which the mother lay was demolished—all except the four walls and ceiling of the room in which she was.

One of the stone-masons at work on the Washington monument told a reporter that the summit of the monument is a terrible place to be during a thunder-storm. He had seen the lightning flashing about, above and below him, while the thunder peals almost knocked him from his feet.

Italian aprons are made from linen towels with a wide stripe embroidered in cross stitch in bright colors. The fringe and stripe are removed from the upper end, a portion of which is then gathered, enough being left at the corners to turn them upon the outside, displaying a bit of embroidery to match the stripe below.

Ostrich feathers uncurled by the damp air can be beautifully curled by drawing the many threads across a silver tea knife. Be careful not to cut or pull them. Hats trimmed with ostrich plumes should always be hung so that the plumage shall fall forward and not smoothly back. Care in this respect will keep them light and fluffy.

Step by step the leading food products of Europe are being reproduced in this country. Macaroni is made by Italians in New York, Neufchatel cheese by Swiss in New Jersey, Schweitzer kase by Germans in Ohio, Albert biscuit by Englishmen in Albany, and caviare by Russians in Harlem. Nearly all of these are exported to Europe, and there sold as domestic manufactures.

New Orleans has an artesian well 380 feet deep from which issues a steady flow of clear, cold water.

SLEEPLESSNESS.

How Victims of Insomnia Soothe Themselves to Slumber.

"Insomnia," remarked an elderly physician of the old school to a reporter, "is a perpetual puzzle to me."

"How so?"

"Well, sleep being not only a natural condition, but a necessity, we find nature furnishing all the conditions to induce sleep, not only in health, but in disease, in ninety-nine cases in a hundred—but the hundreth case is the mystery. Why, sir," said the doctor, warmed into professional enthusiasm, "when we see how quickly and easily men adapt themselves to most unnatural and artificial conditions of life—working by night and sleeping by day; sleeping with the clink of the forge, the jar and clash of machinery, or the shrill whistle of escaping steam in their ears, and waking with a start at any unfamiliar sound, or at the cessation of the accustomed racket—it seems as though men could never suffer from sleeplessness."

"But will not excessive fatigue explain sleep under such trying circumstances?"

"Not satisfactorily. 'I am too tired to sleep,' is a common expression; while in one case, that of a night-watchman in a bank, a cripple who has not probably done a day's work in a dozen years, sleeps with his his ear close to the incessant buzz and whirr of the burglar alarm, and has twice been roused only to find a tramp or drunkard asleep on the steps outside the bank. Once, after I had been treating him with a medicine that slightly affected his hearing, this watchman complained bitterly that he was getting 'too deaf to sleep," and declared that he was kept awake by not hearing the burglar alarm distinctly.

"When you realize that the strongest man may, in spite of his will, be reduced to the blind helplessness of slumber by the droning of a friendly bore, an accumulation of foul air, or the temperature of the weather, it becomes still more mysterious to me how slight a thing will 'murder sleep' and work measureless mischief to mind and body."

"Perhaps," suggested the experienced reporter, "an unquiet conscience, domestic anxieties, or an unpaid debt—"

"Fudge!" retorted the doctor, "I have seen a man sleep soundly and tranquilly up to within an hour of his own hanging; I have seen my brother fall asleep while waiting for his mother-in-law—a peculiarly wide-awake anxiety she is, too—and I should not be sorry if a careless debtor were sometimes kept awake; but you can lay down no rule in these cases, except that each man is a rule to himself.

"The various eccentricities and whimsical fancies of the men and women who suffer from wakefulness defy all rule, and would be amusing if they were not so dangerous to the patient and so discouraging to the doctor. There are many persons who cannot sleep on the left side, others who can have their heads point to some pet quarter of the compass, patients who demand noise, like the ticking of a clock, and others who require perfect silence to enable them to fall asleep. What, for instance, do you think of a woman who cannot or will not sleep in a room carpeted with anything except straw matting, and who cannot sleep more than ten consecutive nights? I am assured and believe that she has faithfully tried, again and again, to exceed this ten night limit, that the eleventh night is invariably sleepless, the twelfth night excited, hysterical perhaps, the next worse, and so on, until, on two occasions when I have been called, I can assure you that her condition was too critical to admit of a suspicion of malingering."

"Are women more subject to it than men?"

"Not in my experience; nor is it confined to the physically or mentally weak among men. A well-known athlete has assured me that, after training for some important event, he used often to be thrown out of condition by sleeplessness for several nights preceding the trial of strength, until he discovered that he could always sleep if the closet door in his chamber were set wide open. Even now, in traveling, if he occupies a room without a closet, he is certain to lose his night's sleep.

"A grave and self-contained judge," continued the physician, "every night ties a black thread tightly round the big toe of his left foot—the right won't do at all—and, with judicial gravity, claims this as a certain cure for what he used to call his 'night fits;' while a classmate of mine at college, now an eminent and eloquent clergyman, once confided to me, with much self-reproach and perturbation of mind, that whenever he had an attack of sleeplessness he became at once possessed by an irrisistible temptation to say 'damn,' and that cabalistic word once uttered, his unrest vanished and sleep came at once. 'Think,' said he to me solemnly, but with a twinkle in his eye, 'of a minister of the Gospel becoming irresponsibly profane for want of something to put him to sleep, when he has a desk full of old sermons in the house.'"

"Irresponsibly profane?" we repeated.

"Quite so."

"Maudesley declares insomnia to be a frequent cause of insanity, and I am inclined to regard it as one of the most obscure of mental diseases."

"And the cure?"

"Well, there is a grim humor about giving a restless man the 'active principle of hops,' to put him to sleep, but, as for permanent cure, the most satisfactory cures are those queer fancies of the patients themselves. They may be absurd and irrational, but they are lasting, and taste better than most medicines.

By the report of the Agricultural Department for January, 1884, Texas was the leading sheep State in the Union, with 7,957,275 sheep, valued at $17,822,056. Ohio had 5,000,036 sheep, valued at $14,650,105.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.:

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 8,.....1884.

BRONZE TURKEYS.—Mr. Stewart of Big Pine has a few of these beautiful birds for sale. See his advertisement.

BEGUN.—The Bishop Station school entered upon its first term last Monday morning, with an attendance of 17 scholars.

INSTALLATION.—Inyo Lodge, No. 546, will install its elected and appointed officers to-night. The full list will be given next week.

RECOVERED.—Sam, the Piute whose throat was cut by his brother, at the Fort Independence Indian camp lately, is up and around again.

STOCK BREEDING.—Mr. J. S. Gorman has just bought five very fine mares of the Norman stock; he intends to make a business of raising colts.

FLOODED OUT.—Captain Keeler had an awkward accident at his residence a few days ago; a drop of water got in through the skylight and flooded him out.

CLOSED FOR A TIME.—The furnace at Elna was closed down last Wednesday. There is some little financial trouble but the matter will be settled in a few days, and then work will be resumed as usual.

AMPUTATION.—Last Monday Doctor Blair cut off a finger from the hand of Warren Fairchild, mortification having set in from the bite of a hog. The finger was cut off close to the third, or knuckle joint.

RATIFICATION DANCE. — Invitations are out for a "grand ratification dance" at Independence next Monday evening. Some of the best music in the valley has been secured for the occasion, and a large attendance is expected.

WHICH?—From the artist Mr. Hanson, we have just received a large photographic group of the pioneers of Mono county. The appearence of the lot may be judged from the fact that Mc Tarnahan is the handsomest among them.

A REMEDY.—Onions are recommended as a remedy to promote sleep. A citizen of Independence who complains that six nights out of seven he is kept awake till near midnight, had better try this remedy, by having his daughter eat raw onions for supper.

RICH SPECIMENS.—A few days ago Joe McDermott brought in some very rich specimens of gold-bearing quartz from Freeborn Canyon. Some of the specimens are from the Golden Reef mine, and some from another mine in the same locality. The claims were originally located by Peter Taylor, several years ago.

AGENT APPOINTED.—Daniel Crough has been appointed agent for the Odd Fellows' Mutual Aid Association of San Francisco, with power to solicit applications for membership in the Association, and to receive and receipt for moneys due and payable thereon. Dan will make a good agent.

SHOOTING.—Although the open season has been in some time and the young quail are now in prime condition, but very little shooting has been done. Now the election is over we suppose the festive cottontail and its long-eared cousin will quail before the ordnance of our local sportsmen.

THEIR TREAT.—The successful candidates for county offices will stand treat on Monday night, they have arranged with Mr. Levy of the Miners Home hotel, for a free supper for all who shall attend the ratification ball. The only expense for those who attend the ball will be the sum named on the cards already issued, and for the purpose there stated, namely, to cover hall rent and music.

PRODUCTION OF THE COMSTOCK.—It would appear that the cream of the mining done on the Comstock goes to the milling companies. The Mining and Scientific Press says: "About 600 tons of 'low grade ore' is the average daily production from the mines on the Comstock and elsewhere in Storey county, Nev. Of this, about 500 tons are daily shipped by the V. & T. Railroad to the mills on the Carson river. The Union Mill & Mining Company do nearly all the crushing, and charge $9 per ton, giving a gross income of about $4,500 per day to the mill-owners. The cost of reduction is estimated to be in the neighborhood of $5 per ton, leaving a net profit of say $2,500 per day."

SOWING THE SEED.—Jack Welch had a lot of barley sowed yesterday afternoon, but without intending it. He started with a pack train for the Kearsarge mine, and just when leaving town one of the mules, laden with barley, reached back to help himself from one of the sacks on his back. The mule pulled at the sack till he loosened his load, and it slipped down under his belly. Then the sowing began, and it was done right lively. The heels of the mule described an upward curve toward his ears, he flew over the sage brush like a swallow; the grain flew also. The rest of the train stampeded, and what with mules, grain, dust, and Jack's remarks, the air was rather murkey for a while. It was some time before order was restored among the demoralized train and progress on the trip resumed.

—Democratic papers joyfully warble:

"The G. O. P.
Is G-O-N-E,
As any one
Of cts. can C."

—A local candidate, whose name has been before the people in the same connection before, was asked how he stood. He replied: "Oh, the usual thirty majority—against me."

WASTE IN MILLING.—A source of never ending anxiety to mill men is waste in milling. The Mining and Scientific Press says. "It seems strange that improvements are not devised, by which the waste in tailings can be prevented. This waste oftentimes is greater than the savings, and always enough to be richly remunerative. That such wasteful methods should still be employed indicates the lucrative field now open to inventive genius. The following extract from the Leadville Herald will illustrate the losses which occur and the savings by reworking. "Mr. John T. Herrick, formerly Manager of the London Mining Company, and at present operating the London mill, is in the city. Mr. Herrick is running the tailings in the ponds through the mill a second time, and is doing very well. They are fed into the battories again the same as ore, and passed under the stamps, the drop of which has been reduced three inches. The tailings all assay from $8 to $15 per ton, and having been subject to repeated freezing and thawing during the past twelve months, are more decomposed and oxidized than when first milled, and yield a greater amount of free-milling gold. Moreover, improvements have been made which insure closer and more economical work. Mr. Herrick also stated that the amalgam secured from tailings is nearly sufficient to pay the running expense of the mill.

Property Transfers.

The following transfers of property have been entered upon the record:

United States to J. B. Haggin, patent for Mariposa mine and two mill sites, Coso Mining District.

John C. Eddy to Herman Waterman, a lot in Darwin; consideration, $1,500.

John C. Eddy to Herman Waterman, 500 feet in Phœnix mine, 750 feet in Inyoite mine, and 1500 feet in Silver Mountain mine, all in Coso district; consideration $2,000.

E. W. Flenniken to James Peregrine, one-twelfth interest in McNally ditch; consideration, $25.

W. J. Little and Joseph Rowan to W. O. Maroney, lot in Bishop Creek; consideration, $1.

S. D. Woodhull to J. H. Backus, one-half interest in each of the following mines: Tubal Cain, Mabel and Emma, and Oneida, all in Union District; consideration, $10.

John T. Hamilton to G. W. Parish, 160 acres of land near Lone Pine; consideration, $300.

Personal Mention.

Mr. and Mrs. Conklin went to Lone Pine this morning.

Mr. Brown, of Elna furnace, has been in town most of the week.

A. R. Burnside of Bodie arrived in Independence last Wednesday.

M. G. Nixon is at Lone Pine, and has been quite sick during the past ten days.

Dr. E. D. Black, a former resident of Alpine county, died at his residence, at Genoa, Nevada, last week.

Mrs. Thompson arrived here a few days ago from Mohave, on a visit to her daughter, Mrs. Webb.

Judge Arnot arrived here this morning from Alpine county. The Judge comes to preside at the Silva trial next week.

Mr. Fairman left here for New York last Wednesday evening. He has been here several months on business connected with mines at Panamint.

Mr. James Reynolds assumed the duties of school teacher at Darwin last Monday. Mr. Reynolds passed a very creditrble examination at the recent meeting of the Board of Education.

Van Vorhies, Republican candidate for Assemblyman, carried his own county of Mono by a majority of two hundred and sixty five. Evidently Mr. Van Vorhies is respected and trusted where he is best known. His majority in Inyo is about sixty five.

LOVELY.—Heaven is full of days, and they are all coming this way, but no one of them in the future eternity will have a lovelier morning than shone out to-day on Owens River Valley. A gentle rain last night has left the air wonderfully clear; the mountains on both sides of the valley appear near by, as if seen through a telescope. The summits of the Sierras are covered with snow, and stand out sharp and clear against the deep blue sky, as if each peak was hewn from solid marble. In the valley birds are singing in keen rivalry with each other till the air is full of their music; roses, geraniums and other flowers are blooming in door yards, and the trees have lost but little of their foliage. Such a morning as this may have inspired the Hebrew poet to sing: "For, lo, the winter is past, the rain is over and gone; the flowers appear on the earth; the time of the singing of birds is come, and the voice of the turtle is heard in our land."

Notes on Science and Industry.

An ingeniously devised and most convenient apparatus has been introduced in France for transferring inflammable liquids. A tube fitted to a cork is bent back, and is filled at the bent part to receive a cover, which is chained to the cork; a longer tube, for the passage of atmospheric air, is placed inside the tube. The large tube is immersed in the bottle or barrel, care being taken to shut the neck or bung of the latter tightly by corking; the cover is then unscrewed, and the bent end of the tube is fitted to the receiving vessel. Mineral oils flow in a continuous stream, and there is no waste. The gas cannot escape, and the exterior air fills the void made by the liquid which has been drawn off, and thus the danger of explosion is avoided. Moreover when the receiver is full, and the spout is immersed in the liquid, the flow ceases at once, as the air can no longer enter by the central tube, which is closed by the liquid. An important desideratum is met by this device.

The "electrical central point blocking apparatus" for railroads is commended by the London Times, the object of the mechanism being to control any pointsman from a central office and to prevent him from showing the line clear until ordered to do so by that office. It consists of a small box and a manipulator, the former having an electric bell at the top and two circular openings in front, exhibiting, in their turn, the two different directions of a train. On the train being announced from the nearest station, the person in charge at the office presses a stud beneath the opening, indicating the direction of the train. The pointsman answers the signal. The points are now set by the manipulator from the central office and simultaneously the lever for the semaphore signal is electrically released, enabling the pointsman to show the line clear.

A singular method of ornamenting watch-cases, etc., with diamonds and other precious stones is thus described: The stone is set in gold or silver, and the lower part of the metal made flat, or to correspond with that part to which it is to be fixed; it is then warmed gently, and the glue applied, which is so very strong that the parts cannot separate. This cement, which will firmly unite bits of glass, and even polished steel, is made by dissolving five or six bits of gum mastic, each of the size of a large pea, in as much alcohol as will suffice to render it liquid; then, in another vessel, is dissolved as much isinglass—previously a little softened in water, though none of the water is used—in good brandy or rum as will make a two-once phial of very strong glue, adding two small pieces of gum albanum or ammoniacum, rubbed or ground until they are dissolved. The whole is then mixed with sufficient heat, and the mixture kept in a closely stopped bottle. Before use, the bottle is set in boiling water.

The question as to long or short rails has been much discussed. It is stated that the first railway line in France, viz., from St. Etienne to Andrezieux, had rails only three feet eleven inches long and weighing forty-five pounds. This was in 1828; but in 1832, on the line from St. Etienne to Lyons, the rail had increased in length to about fourteen feet eight inches, and to 133 pounds weight. Various increases continued thus to be made in France, until the length reaches nineteen feet six inches. England adopted a rail measuring from twenty-one to twenty-four feet, with a weight of 110 pounds per thirty-nine running inches. The great objection urged against the increase of length is that the iron rail exfoliates and is damaged at any point, instead of only at the ends. The case is different, however, with cast steel rails, these being now turned out in Belgium and France some eighty-five feet in length. It is further stated that, considering the dilation due to changes of temperature, the maximum length of a French rail is thought best to be about forty-nine feet three inches.

According to Stenhouse, paraffine is excellent for waterproofing hempen hose and other things. The article to be treated is lightly stretched and heated over a hot plate of iron, and then rubbed as evenly as possible with a piece of paraffine; it is then pressed with a hot iron or between rollers, so that it will penetrate it thoroughly. Instead of using a piece of paraffine, the latter may be cast in a cylinder with a wooden core—like a printer's roller—and the goods drawn over it, pressing them down sufficiently; or the paraffine can be rubbed on cold and then a hot iron passed over it. Paper can be saturated with melted paraffine on a warm plate of iron, the goods wrapped in it, and the whole pressed between hot iron plates or metallic rolls. When long pieces of goods are to be treated, the process can be made continuous by passing the stuff over one or more warm rollers that are kept covered with paraffine by running in a bath of the melted substance, the excess of paraffine being removed by a scraper, a brush, or hot rollers. When paraffine is employed in solution, the goods must first be well dried.

The latest form of incandescent electric lamp brought forward in England has for its object the production of a more complete vacuum, by effecting the removal of residual oxygen, and, in some cases, residual nitrogen. This is accomplished by employing a supplementary carbon filament, or a wire which may itself be made of oxidizable metal like iron or zinc, or be covered with an oxidizable metal, such as magnesium or other suitable substance placed within the bulb, and capable of being temporarily thrown into circuit. By the passage of the current, after more or less complete exhaustion by the pump, the carbon filament or oxidizable wire will be heated, the result of this being the absorption of the residual oxygen, and, when magnesium is employed, the residual nitrogen which is contained in the bulb.

The Carving Up of a Continent.

It is now apparent that the time is near when the African Continent will be carved up into States and Territories, each having an independent existence; or, possibly, there may be a confederacy of States under a central authority. Africa, with its old civilization, especially along the Mediterranean, and with the ruins of Carthage and other great cities not quite extinct, is comparatively a new country. For the most part, its civilization has disappeared. The Moors and Arabs represent a good part of what is left. That kind of civilization is illustrated by the condition of Morocco, where the Moors are in the ascendency, and the Soudan, where the Arabs and Nubians rule. As to the Egyptian civilization the modern phase of it is not to be compared with the civilization which inspired the building of the great cities of ancient Egypt.

In view of the near future, it could hardly be otherwise than that an intense interest should be manifested as to the way in which the African Continent should be carved up. Great Britain is practically in possession of both extremes of the African Continent. She is holding Egypt up from the slough of utter bankruptcy and financial ruin. At the same time she is sending the largest British army into the Soudan, in fact, the largest army of white men that ever invaded that country. This army is sent ostensibly to relieve Gordon at Khartoum and to draw off the Egyptian troops from that country. The ulterior object is not fully disclosed. But when has Great Britain ever abandoned a conquered country?

Now, with all the wastes of the Soudan, its deserts and its lack of water, it is a country of vast resources. The best evidence of that theory is the large population which it is now sustaining. It is as good a country as a considerable part of India, which the British are holding in a very firm grasp. When the time for carving up comes it is probable that Great Britain will have the largest share of Northern Africa. Egypt will make one large province, and the Soudan country will make two or three more. For between Egypt and the equatorial line there are not less than ten millions of people, who nominally belong to the Soudan country, or would be naturally tributary to it. Reaching the equatorial region, there is a vast lake system not exceeded in magnitude by the great lakes in our own country. This is the best part of Africa. The greater part of it is a high table-land, rich in agricultural resources and minerals, comparatively healthy, and is supporting a dense population. Stanley estimated that more than forty million people were living in the valleys of the Upper Congo, or were tributary to the affluents of that great river. How Central Africa will be carved up is still the unsolved problem. It is probable that all the civilized nations of Europe will have colonies there.

While Egypt and the Soudan country are now practically under the protectorate of Great Britain, France has a protectorate over Tunis, and is in absolute possession of Algiers, and is gradually encroaching upon the semi-barbarous empire of Morocco. A protectorate in these instances also means a final maturity into absolute possession. There is no more prospect that France will relinquish its hold of Tunis than that it will give up Algiers, which has been acquired at such a large expenditure of life and treasure. Morocco is not wholly independent, but is a suzerainty of Turkey. The relation however is remote, and consists principally in paying to Turkey a certain amount of tribute money. The islands in the Atlantic, properly belonging to Africa, are mostly claimed by Spain and Portugal.

Along the Atlantic Coast of Africa there are several colonies. Between the Senegal and Congo Rivers these colonies are now looming up into some importance. Liberia is the only independent State, and that has been planted and sustained largely through American influence. It is not now in a very promising condition, and its future is doubtful. The French claim Senegambia. The British hold Sierra Leaone on the Atlantic Coast. The French claim the Gaboon Coast, and the Portuguese have a normal hold of the mouth of the Congo. With respect to the coast colonies, they are, for the most part, unhealthy for white men.

The highlands of the interior are salubrious; as much so as the highlands of Central America. The inland exterior boundaries of many of these colonies are somewhat indefinite. The extent here and there is just about as far into the interior as an orderly government can be conveniently maintained. Going south from the Congo, along the Atlantic Coast, the Portuguese claim a coast line of not less than four hundred miles. Beyond that limit Germany has already acquired a considerable area of territory. Then come the English possessions around the Cape of Good Hope, extending up on the east side of the continent along the shore of the Indian Ocean for twelve hundred miles or more. Then northerly the Portuguese claim the coast for nearly eight hundred miles.

The great island of Madagascar, almost as large as a continent, lying off the East African Coast, has been practically independent; and in great part its population of about four millions has been redeemed from barbarism through the labor of Christian missionaries. It is here that the French are making a stand, and under one pretense and another are reducing considerable territory along the island coast to possession. These are the principal European claimants to fractional parts of Africa. The claims to the vast interior of Africa are of a still more shadowy character. The carving process is about to begin. What will be the fate of the two hundred millions of natives when the continent has been entirely carved up among European powers? There is a strong probability that during the next two decades there will be nothing unclaimed in Africa save the worthless deserts and some of the unhealthy lowlands. Since the settlement of the North American Continent there has been no such prospect of the planting of States, and the carving up of a vast territory, as that now relating to the African Continent.

A little girl noticing the glittering gold filling in her aunt's front teeth, exclaimed, "Aunt Mary, I wish I had copper-toed teeth like yours!"

A CLEVER PARODY.

The following reply to Robert Burns' popular poem is taken from an Australian paper:—

"A man's a man," says Robert Burns,
"For a' that and a' that,"
But though the song be clear and strong,
It lacks a note for a' that.
The lout who'd shirk his daily work,
Yet claim his wage and a' that,
Or beg when he can earn his bread,
Is not a man for a' that.

If all who dine on homely fare,
Were true and brave and a' that;
And those whose garb is "hodden grey,"
Was fool or knave and a' that;
The vice and crime that shame our time,
Would fade and fall, and a' that;
And ploughman be as good as kings,
And churls as earls for a' that.

You see yon brawny, blustering, sot,
Who swaggers, swears, and a' that;
And thinks, because his strong right arm
Might fell an ox, and a' that,
That he's as noble, man for man,
As duke or lord and a' that,
He's but a brute, beyond dispute,
And not a man for a' that.

A man may have a large estate,
Have palace, park, and a' that,
And not for birth but honest worth,
Be thrice a man for a' that,
And Donald, herding on the muir,
Who beats his wife, and a' that,
Be nothing but a rascal boor,
Nor half a man for a' that.

It comes to this, dear Robert Burns,
The truth is old and a' that,
The rank is but the guinea's stamp,
The man's the gold for a' that,
And though you put the minted mark
On copper, brass, and a' that,
The lie is gross, the cheat is plain,
And will not pass for a' that.

For a' that, and a' that,
'Tis soul and heart and a' that,
That make the king a gentleman,
And not his crown and a' that.
And man with man, if rich or poor,
The rest is he for a' that,
Who stands erect in self respect,
And acts the man for a' that.

THE TATTLER.

I've often thought it strange, indeed,
That everywhere, despite all creed,
Despite the laws of God and man,
That everywhere there is a clan
Who find their greatest pleasure in Indulging that peculiar sin
Of telling what one neighbor did,
Or what another neighbor said
About somebody.

Each neighborhood has tattlers two,
And some not blessed with quite so few,
Who go to church and see and hear,
But not the sermon or the prayer;
They talk of this, or point at that,
A dated dress, a feathered hat,
And then go home to talk of all,
Or make an evening's gossip call
Upon somebody.

Learn How to Think.

Knowing how to think is fraught with the greatest blessings, and is attended with the most beneficial results. It means a higher state of existence; more food, more books, more clothes, and of a better quality, creates a desire to associate with the intelligent rather than with the vulgar rich; it is the key to theologic and common sense; it means evolution and not revolution, civility and not servility; keeps down class distinctions and prevents the existence of an aristocracy not in accordance with natural law. It teaches a man to "look upon himself as being a man, and upon his neighbor as being nothing more;" prevents him from sinking his identity in that of another, and also from making assertions that he cannot prove by the highest authorities: gives him the moral courage to express a truth that may be contrary to the preconvinced opinions of the majority of mankind; prevents him from being, to a great extent, cajoled, coerced, or purchased; from being sanctimonious, vituperative, and dogmatic; enables him to see virtues in those not born in the same swamp with himself, and presents him, to a very great extent, from crucifying those who may not believe in the thirty-nine articles of Calvinism, or in the doctrine of transubstantiation; prevents that slavish "fidelity to the prince," which monarchists delight in terming "loyalty;" prevents brutalization of the upper, vulgarizing of the mile, brutalizing the lower class in blindly politic; it causes a man to think more, talk less; prevents caviling and weak objections; teaches a man to estimate character or principles by the manner in which either one or the other affects his prejudices; in a word, "he lives longest who thinks the most," and thinks the most correctly.—James Stanley.

Pulque to be Introduced.

It is announced as one of the developments of the railroad era in Mexico, that a Boston company is making arrangements to bottle pulque and ship it to the United States. The addition of this highly inebriating juice of the aloe to American drinks will not be very agreeable. It makes people "crazy drunk" when taken in fairly large drinks, and in the event of its importation the number of drunkards will be greatly increased. Pulque is very difficult to bottle; in fact it was believed a few years ago that it would be impracticable to export it on account of its fiercely effervescing qualities.—The Current.

Paris' Bad Matches.

Matches are fearfully dear in Paris, and horribly bad. They only ignite the feelings against them. A servant has calculated that it takes two matches to light the gas, three to light a candle, four a cigarette, eighteen a government cigarette, twenty-two a cigar, thirty-two a pipe, and 200 to light the fire in a stove.—American Queen.

In 1839 the total production of wool in the United States was 35,803,114 pounds, with imports at 9,898,740 pounds. In 1882 the total production was 200,000,000 pounds, with imports at 70,575,478 pounds.

THE LIME-KILN CLUB.

"Does Natur' Make Mistakes,"—Address by M. Leary.

The Janitor and his assistants had no sooner arrived at Paradise Hall Saturday evening to sweep out the peanut shucks and apple cores and make ready for the meeting when they discovered a white man secreted in the wardrobe in which the regalia is stored. He was at once hauled out and questioned, but to the excited and indignant interrogations he maintained a sulky silence. He was taken to the foot of the grand staircase and trifled with for about five minutes, at the end of which time he was sent out to the world a war-map on legs. On the floor of the main hall was found a corkscrew which the villain lost.

HAD ARROVE.

The fact that Brother Gardner had on a starched shirt and had oiled his hair prepared the members for the bit of news he announced at the opening of the meeting:

"Gem'len, de cha'r tooks pleasure in denouncin' de fack dat de Hon. Edward Leary, of Washington, State of Delaware, am present in de aunty-room, an' waitin' to addressus. He arrove heah at a very lait hour de odder night, an' passed six hours in de police stashun radder den to wake any of us up. He has for two days past bin a guest at my house, an' though I mus' say dat he kin git away wid more provishuns dan any three men who eber sot down at my table, his mind 'pears to be richly stored wid first-class informashun. He will be brought in heah to address us on de subjeck of 'Does Natur' Make Mistakes?'' De entire evenin' will be tooken up wid de lecktur' an' its follerin' results. If any pusson in dis hall should so far forgit hisself as to knock down de stovepipe, upsot a lamp or raise a commoshun in de vicinity of de B'ar Traps doorin' de delibery of dis lectur' he will hav reason to disremember it fur a y'ar to come. De orator will now be brought in."

HE APPEARS.

The Reception Committee were absent five minutes and then appeared in company with the victim, who appeares to be a man about 45 years of age, slightly lame in one leg, one shoulder way down, and features erected upon no fixed principles of art. He was, however, entirely at ease, and as he mounted the platform and lengthened each suspender an inch and a half and removed his collar even Elder Toots realized that the stranger befor him was no subject for flies to light on. His introduction was followed by a cheer which upset a barrel of molasses in the grocery below, and he started out with:

"Dis am one of de proudest moments of my life. When I fust read of dis club, six or seben y'ars ago, I nebber dreamed dat de day would come when I should stan' in dis grand ole Roman Hall an' address you. I read of Waydown Bebee, Pickles Smith, Trustee Pullback, Rev. Penstock an' odder great statesmen in your club wid liveliest interest, but de ideah dat I should ever stan' heah an' look down upon deir bald heads an' double chins would hev seemed to me a corrugated impossibility. [Penstock bobs up but falls back again.]

"Does Natur' make mistakes? We think she does. Indeed, we assert she does, an' she am slandered an' abused on dat line of reasonin'. Let us look into some of de accusashuns. Dar am de frog. Why should he be built like a fox, fur fast runnin', or like a bird fur flyin'! His native heath am a swamp or a puddle. He doan' keer to trabble aroun' de kentry, an' as a bird he'd be a dead failure. Why didn't Natur' gin him claws to cratch an' teeth to bite? Kase he am no fighter. He am on de run at de fust sign of a row. His hind legs am purvided wid a set of springs which lift him off a log an' drap him six feet away befo' a blue-jay kin shout twice. [Sensation all over the hall.]

"Let us look at de fish. Pussons have wondered why he didn't hev ha'r on the same as a cat, an' why he wasn't fixed to climb trees like a squirrel. Natur' made no mistake when she decided on scales to kiver his body and keep de dampness out. Dey doan' tangle up in de weeds an' dey doan' pull out or hev to be dyed. If fish could climb trees what good would it do fur a man to spit on his baited hook and drap it into de riber an' sot dar' 'de hull arternoon? De fish might all be out in de woods dat day. [Evidences of deep satisfaction in all four corners.]

"It was not long ago," continued the orator, as he shifted his weight on the other leg, "dat I heard a pusson beratin' Natur' kase he had to eat to sustain life. When Natur' made him dat way she showed a heap of wisdom an' furnished him an incentive to git up an' dust around. If man did not hev to eat de populashun of dis world would be too lazy to git up a decent-sized argyment on religun. [Suppressed enthusiasm.] If Natur' hadn't intended that we should w'ar cloze we shouldn't hev ambishum to git into de Legislachur an' Congriss. [Cheers on the half-shell.]

"Did Natur' make a mistake when she contructed de oyster? Some folks complain kase he has no wishbone, an' kase dar am no wings an' legs to sarve up on de table. Natur' intended de oyster fur people who can't chew deir meat. Instead of runnin' aroun' de kentry he settles down whar' he kin be found when wanted. It am de same way wid de clam. If he had de rovin' disposishun of de fox it would take six months to git up a clam-bake. [Nods in the affirmative.]

"We hev summer," said the orator, as he pulled down his vest, "in order dat water-mellyons may ripen, an' we hev winter dat 'possums may fatten np. We hev 16,456 changes of weather in de course of a y'ar, in order to accommodate all minds as far as possible. We hev moonlight nights fur sich pussons as am behindhand in hoein' corn or sawin' wood, an' we hev dark an' cloudy nights fur de benefit of burglars, cats an' companies. Natur' didn't make de kentry all mountains nor all prairie, kase she realized dat de scenery would be monotonous. Had de sile bin all sand we could have raised nuffin but

How Bears Fish.

Very few people know that bears take to water naturally. They roam over the mountains and through forests, dig open rotten logs for ants and worms, and secure all the hornet's nests they can, and tear them to pieces and eat the young grubs, pick berries of all descriptions and eat them, and would seem to belong to the dry land animals. The fact is different. They love the water, not, perhaps, as well as the moose and deer, but better than most dry land animals. They are fond of fish, and are expert fishermen, and show more cunning and instinct, if not reason, than many city chaps I have seen about the lakes. I came suddenly upon a very large bear in a thick swamp, lying upon a large hollow log across a brook, fishing; and he was so much interested in his sport that he did not notice me until I approached very near to him, so that I could see exactly how he baited his hook and played his fish.

He fished in this wise: There was a large hole through the log on which he lay, and he thrust his forearm through the hole and held his open paw in the water and waited for the fish to gather round and into it, and when full, he clutched his fist and brought up a handful of fish, and sat down and ate them with great gusto; then down with the paw again, and so on. The brook was fairly alive with little trout and red-sided suckers, and some black suckers, and so the old fellow let himself out on the fishes. He did not eat their heads. There was quite a pile of them on the log. I suppose the oil in his paw attracted the fish, and baited them even better than a fly hook, and his toe nails were his hooks, and sharp ones, too, and once grabbed, the fish were sure to stay. They also catch frogs in these forest brooks, and drink of the pure water in hot summer days, and love to lie and wollow in muddy swamps as well as our pigs in the mire. They often cross narrow places in lakes by swimming, and also rivers, and seem to love to take a turn in the water. I once saw one swimming from the mainland to the big island in Moosehagunctic Lake, with just a streak of his back out of the water, looking like a log moving along. Sometimes you see only their heads out of the water; at other times half of their bodies are to be seen. We account for this difference by their condition. If fat, the grease helps to buoy them up; if lean they sink lower in the water.

German Military Conscription.

NEW YORK, September 14th.—A special dispatch from London says: The rigorous military conscription in Germany was illustrated by a recent incident at Greiz. Two gentlemen of that city, being soldiers of the Landwehr class, were ordered to report for duty for the autumn maneuvers of the German army. The only means of transportation offered was on a cattle train with a lot of peasants and Landwehr soldiers. The gentlemen refused to take places in the cattle trucks, and telegraphed a remonstrance to Emperor William, and the reply came back, through military official channels, to the effect that the offenders would be tried in the usual way for disobedience of orders. The two gentlemen were accordingly duly tried by a court martial, and the sentence of the Court has just been approved and promulgated. The sentence is for each eight years' imprisonment at hard labor in the common prison at Greiz.

Where Was the Fatted Calf?

Returned Prodigal—"Dear! dear! How little the old farm has changed!"

Honest Farmer—"Very few changes have been made, my son. You will find things pretty much as you left them twenty years ago. Over there is the apple tree you planted."

"Yes, the same tree, only larger; and there is the dog-house I made for the new pup!"

"Yes, poor Carlo, he died of old age ten years ago. That dog you see is his grandson."

"And over there is the chicken-house I helped to build for old biddy's first brood."

"Yes, poor old biddy! I wish I had known you were coming home."

"Why?"

"Because I might have saved her; but I took her to market last week."—Philadelphia Call.

The Color Line Abolished.

September 8th the public schools of New York City opened with 300,000 pupils, an increase of 10,000 since last year. The reopening witnessed in that city the obliteration of the last trace of the color line in education. By Act of Legislature in May, the colored schools, as such distinctively, were abolished, and the pupils, black and white, were all merged together. The law was to take effect in September, 1884.

A Connecticut man has invented a machine which makes flour barrels of paper and straw pulp, at a cost of twenty-three cents, while the wooden one costs fifty-five.

SOCIAL VIGNETTES.

Slaughter of the Innocents, The Gum Club, Etc.

A firm in Paris, France, has arranged with a New York milliner for a supply of 40,000 skins of birds of beautiful plumage. These will be stuffed and mounted for the coming season, when they will adorn hats, bonnets and evening toilets. Not only will birds and their feathers be used for toilets, but for house decoration: fringes and fans of feathers, and bunches arranged artistically being very popular. Dresses and mantles will be trimmed with the beautiful singing-birds of our American forests, while rarer birds will be eagerly purchased by the very wealthy. Mrs. Mackay, the California millionaire's wife, has appeared in Paris in a white satin robe garlanded with robins' wings. Miss Work, an amateur theatrical star of distinction in private circles, appeared in a costume worn at a wedding which called for the sacrifice of one hundred gold-throated canaries, and the hats and bonnets composed entirely of feathers will soon be accompanied by feather mantles. Miss Bernhardt has a superb feather mantle in her wardrobe, and Olive Logan used to possess one made entirely of tiny blue feathers overlapping each other, involving the use of hundreds of tiny birds.

Apropos of birds on hats, is a sad story never before in print. There lived in Chicago before the fire and after it a favorite milliner who was overburdened with orders from the most fastidious customers. She lost a husband she loved and a child she adored, but still went on trimming bonnets. Everybody wanted her finger work. She was simply "Kate" to her friends, and all her customers were her friends. One day she was called upon suddenly to trim a hat for Miss Hooley—Jack Hooley's daughter. It was a labor of love, and Kate worked faithfully; she took two large birds—immense gray and black ones—a chain at least half an inch thick, and fastening the two birds together proceeded to decorate the side of the hat with them. It was such an exageration of a prevailing fashion that the tired and overworked brain of the little milliner gave way, and holding up the fantastic head-gear for inspection, she laughed long and mirthlessly. The other inmates of the store hurried to her, but she never stopped laughing for four-and-twenty hours; then she was placed in an asylum, where she remained for many months. I never see a monstrous bird on a hat without thinking of poor Kate W—g, now at rest and forever.

If the ghosts of these murdered robins, thrushes, swallows, canaries, doves and wild birds should suddenly appear to the wearers of the defunct songsters, crying, "but for you we now might live," what a fluttering of ruffled feathers there would be! It is not improbable, though, that the enterprising fair ones would not captnre the ghosts and wear them too.

The newest wrinkle in the tea-table circle is the institution known as the gum social. Only the members of a gum club in good standing are invited. The gum is passed around in a porcelain bowl or a sweet grass basket in the lump. Commercial gum is es-chewed. It must be the native gum in a natural state. The visitors choose a lump and chew it. One lady gave a harrowing thrill of reality to the occasion by saying:

"Ladies, if your gum is hard, I'll call John in and he'll start a chew for you." John was her husband; it is needless to say he was not called. When the members have chewed their social quid for an afternoon, they find a place for it previous to going home, as no member ever takes her gum with her. One selects the under side of the piano, another the corner of the book case. At a recent social at the house of the president of the club one lady hid hers on the back of a statuette of Diana, while another selected a plaster cast of Napoleon on the Island of St. Helena. Convivial songs, such as "Oh, gum, gum away!" "Gum where my love lies dreaming!" and "Gum, O gum with me!" are introduced with pleasing effect. Spruce and tamarack gum are the club brands. And just here a word to the public. It has been erroneously stated that the gum club cannot talk and chew both. There never was a greater error. The gum club is not a salvation army or a band of reformers. It meets to exchange views and chews, and if it choose to gossip it just does, and what are you going to do about it?

There is a game of letters for an evening's amusement at home which is very entertaining. The person who has decided on a word or name selects the letters, mixes them up, gives an idea of the person, place or thing meant, and the company put the letters in shape, forming, perhaps, a dozen other words before they hit on the one intended. At an evening gathering on Park street last week a word was given out with the definition, "An animal that sings by night."

After the company had exhausted their ingenuity, and formed several dozen wrong words, the wicked Professor who sent it out took the letters, rearranged them, and the intelligent company read the name of the nocturnal singer, "Tomcat." It broke them all up.

There is a wonderful variety in the lights of a great city. Some stare with a bright, insolent flame that seems to defy anything to escape its vigilant watch-light. They blind the others burn patiently, with a quiet, counseling light, as if they would importune the unwary to go home. Long rows of lights have a misty look, as if every night they shed tears for the unfortunate. Then there are cruel, wicked lights, that shine only to show the way to destruction.

"Oh, cruel lamps of London,
If tears your light could drown
Your victims' eyes would weep then,
Oh, Lights of London town."

There is a sad hour when the lights burn with eloquent luster. It is the hour near dawn, when the stars are dying out, and a faint flush of splendor is visible in the east. Haggard faces are lifted for a moment to the sky; humid eyes look heavenward. Then the lights are extinguished and sin and sorrow, the twin demons of the night, vanish like ugly dreams before the gray dawn of morning.

The City of Foo Chow.

Foo Chow, the scene of the opening of hostilities between France and China, is called by the natives Hokchui, or Happy City. It lies in latitude 26° 5′ north, and longitude 11° 20′ east, on the northern side of the Min, thirty-four miles from its mouth and nine from Pagoda Island. The city is situated in a plain, surrounded by hills, forming a natural and most magnificent amphitheater of vast dimensions, whose fertility emulates and adds to its beauty. Suburbs extend from the walls three miles to the banks and stretch along on both sides of the stream. They are connected with each other and with a small islet in the river by a stone bridge built in the Eleventh century. The scenery is bold, and such parts of the surrounding hills as are not cultivated or used for graves are covered with pines. Some of the hills north of the city are 3,000 feet high. Opposite Foo Chow the land is lower, and the suburb is built upon an island formerly the division of the main channel, seven miles above the city. The branches reunite at Pagoda Island. This island and the plain on each side form a large basin, about twenty miles long by fifteen wide. The river is crowded with floating habitations, ferry-boats, and trading craft, rendering the surface an animated and noisy scene. The flowers grow in pots in the boats, and those usually worn by the boatwomen in their hair all assist in imparting a pleasing aspect to the lively sight.

The walls are about thirty feet high and twelve feet wide at the top. The gates, seven in number, are overlooked by high towers; smaller guard-houses stand upon the walls at short intervals, in which a few soldiers lodge and where two or three cannon in each their object. The city is divided into wards and neighborhoods, each of which is under its own police and head men, who are responsible for the peace in their respective districts. From the Washinishan, an eminence on the north side of the city, the view is extensive, and presents a great diversity of charming objects. The square battlements of the wall are seen extending in a devious and irregular circuit for more than eight miles, and inclosing most of the buildings except on the south. On the southeast a hill rises rather abruptly more than 500 feet, its ridge built up with interspersed dwellings, and another on the extreme north of the city, surmounting a watch-tower, closes the prospects in that direction. Two pagodas within and fantastic-looking watch-towers upon the walls, large, regular-built granaries, and a vast number of flag-staffs in pairs, indicating temples and offices, contribute to relieve the otherwise dull monotony, which is still further diversified by many large trees. Several lookout-houses are placed on the streets or upon the roofs of buildings for the accommodation of watchmen, one of which immediately attracts the attention of the visitor from its height and its clock-dial, with Roman letters. Few vacant spaces occur within the walls of the city, which is everywhere equally well built.

Serpentine canals divide the country round about into plats of greater or less extent, of every form and hue, while they help to drain the city and provide channels for boats coming from the river. These parts of the landscape are dotted with hamlets and cottages, and, where the ground is higher, with graves and tombstones. To one seated on this eminence, says Dr. S. W. Williams in "The Middle Kingdom," the confused hum of mingling cries ascending from the town below—the beating of gongs, crackling of fireworks, reports of guns, vociferous cries of hucksters and coolies, combining with the barking of dogs and other domestic sounds, as well as those from the crows, fishhawks, and magpies nearer by—inform him in the liveliest manner that the beautiful panorama he is looking down upon is filled with teeming multitudes in all the tide of life. On the western side of the city is a sheet of water called Si Hu, or West Lake, with a series of unpretending buildings and temples lying along its margin, a bridge crossing its expanse, and fishing nets and boats floating upon its bosom. The watch-tower on the hill in the northern part of the city is upon the wall, which here runs near a precipice 200 feet high; it is a most conspicuous object when approaching the place.

One of the most recent and valuable engineering inventions is an improved steam and hydraulic joint exhibited in London. According to the description given, the flanges of the pipes are in this arrangement furnished with grooves of a triangular shape, into which rings of a similar section are inserted, forming, when the joint is made, a triangular or wedge-shape washer, of which the apex is nearest the periphery. These washers are made of prepared or ordinary India-rubber patent packing, asbestos, or any other appropriate material. The form and position of the washer in the joint will, it is said, resist considerable pressure, a test of four thousand pounds' hydraulic pressure resulting satisfactorily.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.:

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 15,.....1884.

B. E. Keenan, alias Jennings, a noted rough of White Pine county, Nev., was killed last week.

M. M. ESTEE says he will be a candidday for the United States Senate, to succeed Farley. Ex-Governor Perkins is talked of as a candidate.

MAUD S. has lowered her record. Last Wednesday she trotted a mile over the Washington track in the unprecedented time of 2:09¼.

THE result in the First Congressional District of this State is still in doubt; the latest count gives Carothers a majority of seven over Henley.

Last Wednesday forty-three deaths from cholera were reported from Paris. From various other French cities deaths were reported from the same cause.

THE latest reports from New York leave Cleveland with a majority of about 1100. It is not expected that there will be any mateial change from these figures.

A CONTEST between rival factions for the management of the Cholar mine at Virginia city has been compromised. The mine will remain under the present management till next March.

LAST Saturday night James G. Blaine was burned in effigy in Bodie. It is a small community that does not contain some fools or blackguards ever ready to cry "crucify him, crucify him."

SECRETARY MACPHERSON says, according to his figures, subject to correction, but not likely to be changed, the Democrats will have 183 members in the next House; the Republicans, 141, and the Greenbackers 1.

THE LEGISLATURE of Georgia ordered the rebel flag hoisted on the State House when the report from the Democratic Central Committee arrived. It is to be presumed that very few members of that Legislature marched under the same flags from '61 till '65.

ROSCOE CONKLING was honored by his party with the highest position it had to give save one. He wanted the highest, and not being gratified, like a spoiled and selfish child, he worked hard to spoil for another what he could not have for himself. His vanity and immense self-conceit were always conspicuous, his malice and vengeful disposition are equally well known. From henceforth he is Roscoe Conkling; only that and nothing more.

FROM a passage in the annual report of General Sheriden, it would appear that he is apprehensive of the communism, and communistic violence in the United States. The General earnestly invites immediate attention to the defenseless condition of the seaboard cities, and earnestly recommends an early beginning of a general system of seacoast fortifications, to be constructed in accordance with the requirements involved by the latest improvements in heavy artillery. "This Nation," he says, "is growing so rapidly that there are signs of other troubles, which, I hope, will not occur, and which will probably not come upon us, if both capital and labor would only be conservative. Still, it should be remembered that destructive explosives are easily made, and that banks, the United States Sub-Treasuries, public buildings and large mercantile houses can be readily demolished and the commerce of the entire cities destroyed by an enfuriated people, with means carried with perfect safety to themselves, in the pockets of their clothing." General Sheridan thinks Fort Riley, for all cavalry purposes, should be made an establishment worthy of our great country.

ANOTHER Mormon, Joseph Evans, has been convicted of bigamy. He was confronted by both his wives on the witness stand. The second wife was first examined. She said she was 29 years of age. She was asked, "Are you married, Miss Parry?" and replied "Yes, sir." "To whom?" "To Joseph Evans." "When were you married?" "May 6, 1880." Then followed a recital by the witness of all the particulars attending the marriage; and of subsequent events up to the time the case was tried. The first wife, Ruth Evans, testified: "I have been married to defendant 33 years; I have six children living and six dead; since 1880 defendant has been absent nearly two years in England; he went away in October, 1882; I am slightly acquainted with Harriet Parry; about four years ago I heard a rumor that she was married to my husband; I sent for her and asked her whether she was married to my husband; she said no; I said, 'The day I see you with my husband I'll kill you.'" These words from the mother of twelve children show the crushing anguish that the infernal sensuality of Mormonism, its brutal selfish disregard of the feelings or rights of woman, inflicts upon those of the sex who are its victims.

MONEY from the United States treasury has been spent in Colorado in sinking artesian wells and making desert land fertile. Governor Tritle, of Arizona, urges that the same be done in that territory. Every body agrees that the sinking of these wells is for the general good, and money so spent is put to good use. Surely, then, it would be equally wise to spend some public money in making land fertile where success is absolutely certain, where there is no possibility of failure to find water, as in the case of sinking artesian wells. The cost of one of these wells applied to taking water from Owens river, would ensure an abundant supply of water for more land than a dozen wells will irrigate. By giving their efforts to the promotion of great benifits of this kind, our Senators and Representives would serve their state and the nation much better than by laboring in the interests of partizan politics.

THE result of the vote for Congressman in the Sixth district is something of a surprise to a good many in Inyo. The three counties that were confidently expected by the friends of Mr. Del Valle here, to give large majorities in his favor, were the counties that secured his defeat. These counties are Los Angeles, San Bernardino and San Diego. The following are the majorities by counties:

Abominations of the Back-yard.

Many back-yards are abominations to the eye and nose. One finds in them all sorts of litter and refuse from oyster cans to old boots. Here the slops of the kitchen are poured to increase the odors which ought to warn every thoughtful person of the malarial influence breeding there, to break out eventually in fevers or diphtheria. If any member of the family dies from one of these diseases his death is probably lamented as a "mysterious dispensation of Providence;" but the minister would say if he were to visit the back yard that death was caused solely by a violation of hygienic law. A very strong argument against a dirty back-yard is the spirit of deception which it is apt to foster in the young members of the family, for it is a constant deceit to present a clean and attractive front yard to the gaze of the passers, while the back-yard is not fit to be seen. Children should be taught to be clean for the sake of cleanliness, and not because outsiders are likely to criticise them. The best plan is to have a hogshead or a large box fitted up in one corner of the yard, and make it a rule to throw into this old cans, boots, broken dishes and all such rubbish, and when there is a great accumulation to bury or burn it. Do not allow anything to be thrown about. Have drains made to convey all slops entire from the house. Make good walks, and let the ground have a fine covering of grass, not weeds. Put up strong supports for the clothes lines. Keep the fence in repair, and plant currant bushes near it. Set vines about the refuse barrel, and train them over it until it is hidden. If you have a receptacle for ashes let it be something which can be shut up, not a row of old barrels to offend the eye and give out a cloud of ashes every time the wind blows. Make it a rule to have the back yard at all times as clean as the front one.

Gather the Fragments.

Be an economist of time. Time is money, and more than that. It is the stuff that eternity is made of. Be, therefore, misers of minutes. We talk of "off hours" and "spare moments," but we have none to spare. True, we need recreation, relief from the daily pressure of care. Sleep cannot be safely abridged. The tension of modern life, the rush and rivalry of business, make rest a necessity, not a luxury. Overwork is a sin against the body. We owe it to ourselves and to others, to keep the body in its best physical condition. We are gathering up the fragments in so doing. Proper relaxation is a part of true economy; but the point to be remembered is the value and significance of all our hours as related to the aim of life. This understood, we shall be frugal to our sanity and lengthening store.

Fragments of time saved will rapidly accumulate wealth, material and spiritual. Many valuable books have been prepared in moments of comparative leisure. In the gold-room of the Philadelphia Mint there is a perforated floor, through which passes the dust or filings of gold, the value of which is thirty thousand dollars every year. This is but a hint of the gathering wealth of many men who have learned how to husband minutes. Kind words and deeds that take but a moment of time may be like fruitful seeds, the harvestings of which may be superlatively rich in this life and in the life to come. Oh, the joy of memory that comes from utilizing fragments of time! Worth more than the sweepings of the gold-room, they enrich alike the life of him who saves and that of him he serves. An extra visit to the closet, the improvement of some fugitive impression or some passing acquaintance, may start streams of beneficent influence that will not only momentarily refresh and restore a wearied soul, but leave permanent effect on character. What we need is a strong purpose, followed out by systematic and persistent effort day by day.—Dr. John A. Lansing.

Scientific Miscellany.

The fact that steam pressure gauges for boilers are something unreliable has led Sig. G. Clodig to propose the use of thermometers to replace or accompany them, as the temperature of the water gives an accurate indication of the pressure of the steam.

After a careful weighing of all available evidence, Prof. Attfield, F. R. S., concludes that there is not the faintest cause for alarm concerning the occurrence of tin, lead or any other metal in canned food. When injury has resulted from eating of such food, it has probably been due to unsoundness of the food and not to poison derived from the can.

A Rain Machine—A project for lessening the duration of droughts has been submitted to the Australian Minister for Water Supply. It is proposed, on the appearance of clouds during a dry season, to send into the air a balloon carrying beneath it a dynamite charge which is to be fired by a wire reaching to the earth. The idea of producing concussions for causing the vapor in the air to condense as rain is not a new one, and it is not probable that it will prove an economical plan for getting water.

Notwithstanding the belief of physicists that sunlight cannot penetrate far into the sea, Mr. S. I. Smith remarks that a comparative study of deep-sea fishes and those from caves shows conclusively that the darkness beneath 2,600 fathoms of sea-water is very different from that of ordinary caverns, and that while it may be possible that this modification of the darkness of the ocean abysses is due to phosphorescence of the animal themselves it does not seem probable that it is wholly due to this cause.

A Cause of Blindness.—A resolution adopted by the Ophthalmological society of England recommends the circulation of a card warning all who have charge of young infants that if a child's eyelids become red and swollen a physician should be consulted at once. The society finds that young children are very liable to a form of ophthalmia, which, if neglected, is likely to result in permanent blindness. An inquiry among many institutions show that the percentage of cases of blindness which are traceable to this infantile disease is very large, being nowhere less than thirty per cent.

Geysers.—Dr. A. C. Peale states that the geyser region of Iceland covers an area about 5,000 square miles; that of New Zealand, 2,500 square miles; and of the Yellowstone National Park, 3,578, square miles. Besides these great geyser regions of the world there are a number of places where a few individual geysers are known, as in Thibet, the Azores Mexico, Japan and Java. In the number of spring and noted geysers, the Yellowstone Park and New Zealand far exceed Iceland, in which the Great Geyser and Stokhr are the only two prominent spouters. The number of springs in New Zealand appears to be large, but is not known. Over 2,000 springs in the Yellowstone Park have been enumerated and mapped, and among them are seventy-one geysers, of which about twenty are known to spout to a height of not less than fifty feet. There is probably but little difference between the three regions in the heights of which the column of water is thrown, although the Yellowstone Park has, perhaps, a greater number which erupt regularly to a height of one hundred feet or more. The maximum recorded heights are 300 feet for the Excelsior of the National Park, 212 feet for one of the New Zealand geysers.

Comet Families.—"There is a family of comets," says Mr. R. A. Proctor, "every member of which travels in an orbit passing near the orbit of Jupiter; another family every member of which can be similarly associated with Saturn; others depending in the same way on Uranus; others on Neptune; and, in fact, so fully has this sort of relations been recognized that the idea has ever been thrown out that a planet traveling outside the orbit of Neptune, but as yet unknown, might be detected by the movements of a comet intersecting the great plane of planetary movement far beyond Neptune's orbit." This remarkable relation among the orbits of the comets which travel periodically around the sun has been interpreted by supposing that all such comets were drawn from outer space by the sun's attraction, and prevented from returning to outer space by the disturbing influence of one or other of the giant planets. Mr. Proctor regards this view as utterly unsatisfactory and inconsistent with observed facts, and explains the existence of the comet families of the giant planets by assuming that masses of matter have been ejected from those planets in eruptions akin to those which take place in the sun. Both Jupiter and Saturn may even now eject matter from time to time with such velocities that it never returns to them, and, in her planetary youth, our earth may have thrown out many comets.

AUSTRALIA AS A HEALTH RESORT.—In Macmillan's Magazine a gentleman who took a voyage to Australia in the hope of being restored to health, relates his experiences, and repeats the opinion that such a journey should be taken in only the earliest stages of disease. Nothing, he says, could have been more disappointing than the weather that greeted our arrival at Melbourne. We had come some 13,000 miles in search of warmth and sunshine, and reached Australia in midsummer to find very much the same weather as we had left behind in England—gloom, rain, and cold winds. "A beautiful season," we were told; "plenty of rain;" which, to English ears, sounded the reverse of encouraging. However, this did not last long; and it was not many weeks before we could fully appreciate the beauty of a cloudy day, and were longing for rain as earnestly as any one. For persons with weak chests I think the climate of Melbourne must be one of the most trying in the world. Mornings of bright, hot sunshine, with scorching wind, change within a very few hours to afternoons of really biting cold, when the strongest are thankful for ulsters or sealskin jackets.

SEEDS FOR THE PEOPLE.

Nearly Four Million Packages Distributed Yearly.

An average Congressman prizes nothing more than his seeds. They are always appreciated, and appeal to the great mass of country constituencies.

This seed distribution is a peculiar affair. From its inception the Agricultural Department has relied upon it as a chief means of keeping in the good graces of Congressmen, with remarkable success. The seed business began small, but last year $75,000 was voted for its support, and this year $100,000 is set aside for that purpose. Formerly the business was done in the basement of the Agricultural Department, but two years ago a spacious building was erected for the purpose, which now also shelters the Civil Service Commissioners.

I went down there the other day to find 169 women and fifty-eight men busily employed in putting up the seed. The men get $1.50 a day, and women $1.25. Mr. Longley, the chief, presides. Every year he buys tons of seeds. Some come from abroad, the greater part grows in this country. He is constantly on the lookout for new varieties, which are bought, tried by the department gardner, and, if a success, sent out. Two-thirds of his appropriation he spends in seeds, the rest in putting them up. Half the women paste together stiff paper envelopes for the smaller kinds, and others sew cotton bags for the farm seeds. Then boys with different sized scoops fill them, and at long tables other women gum the envelop lips, or, with a few quick stitches, sew the bags. Then they are piled up in heaps like a small grist-mill, waiting to be sent away. This work is going on all the year. Now the winter wheat is being prepared, to be followed by the cotton for the South.

During the year just over Mr. Longley has mailed 3,622,738 packages, all going free. Of these 2,912,730 are given to the Congressmen, although by law they are only entitled to two-thirds. Then the Agricultural Department has a crop correspondent in every county, and a general one in each State. The former got 395,995 packages, the latter 72,450, while miscellaneous applicants received 270,653. And so perfect is the system that great books are kept wherein each recipient and what he receives are set down. The seeds are of all sorts, from field corn and potatoes to the rarest flowers. Peas, beans, corn and potatoes are put up in quart sacks and the flower seeds in tiny envelopes. The list includes over fifty kinds, while of vegetables there are 128 varieties, and of flowers 131. These two are more than two-thirds of the whole. Last year 2,351,835 lots of vegetables and 563,638 of flower seeds were distributed, turnips ranking next, with 425,858, wheat 69,290, tobacco 114,671, potatoes 112,229, sorghum 34,359, while of the poor despised sunflower 565 packages were given away.

But, the reader will say, what a job it must be for a Congressman to do up and address such a number of packages. Allowing that the division was made equally, each one received last year 7,104. This is not literally true, for the city members very often exchange their seeds with bucolic statesmen for books and other perquisites, while the country members, who never can get enough seeds, go in troops to Dr. Loring to beg for more than they get by allowance and exchange. He always manages to squeeze out a few extra, which accounts for their having more than two-thirds. But taking the average number, over 7,000 of these bundles to direct would be a large job. Instead of that, they do this: Every Congressman keeps a wonderful book of names. He ransacks directories, writes to local politicians and relies on his memory to get a list of all the men in his district who for any reason are worth looking after. Thousands of them, with addresses, are thus on hand. The volume is sent to the Seed Office. There the clerks direct to each name a variety of seeds, and in the mail goes at the same time a neat official postal card which bears these words, the blank appropriately filled:

SIR—At the request of Hon. —— we send you a package of ——. Very respectfully,
GEORGE B. LORING, Commissioner.

Thus the recipient sees whence the donation comes, even if the member does not have the bags sent to his room to be directed by his own hand. One wagon is kept constantly carrying the parcels to the postoffice, and, if the increase goes on, no one knows what bounds this grand distribution may not reach.—[Correspondence Cincinnati Commercial.

Proof of Death.

If most people are afraid of anything, it is of being buried alive. That cases do happen where it is very difficult even for the experienced physician to determine whether a person is really or but apparently dead, without his having recourse to means which, while they would at once settle the dispute, would place life, if it really still existed, in jeopardy, may be judged from the fact that the French Academy, some ten or fifteen years ago, offered a prize of forty thousand francs for the discovery of some means by which even the inexperienced may at once determine whether in a given case death had ensued or not. A physician obtained the prize. He had discovered the following well-known phenomenon: If the hand of the suspected person is held toward the candle or other artificial light, with the fingers stretched, and one touching the other, and one looks through the spaces between the fingers towards the light, there appears a scarlet red color where the fingers touch each other, due to the still circulating fluid blood, as it shows itself through the transparent, not yet congested tissues; but when life is extinct, this phenomenon at once ceases. The most extensive and thorough trials established the truth of this observation, and the prize was awarded to its discoverer.

Timothy was introduced into this country from England by Timothy Hanson, of Maryland, about 100 years ago. It has for many years been one of the most popular grasses for hay for horses.

Changes Going on in China.

The Chinaman is clannish and conservative. But he is remarkably free from prejudice, religious or patriotic, especially in matters of tangible interest. He has a natural objection to alter his clothes, unlike the Japanese, for they suit him better than any other. But he has no objection to purchasing the article which he judges to be the cheapest and best, wherever it may come from. He is very sensible in his economy, and if he prefers the home-made article, it is because he finds it cheaper and more enduring. Native patterns of cloth both woolen and cotton, if scrupulously imitated, will find buyers if laid down cheaper than the native article. Though the Chinese are conservative, foreign articles are creeping into use. Clocks, watches, matches, lamps, red blankets, are now seen not only everywhere in the seaport towns and near the coast, but far inland.

The Chinese, contrary to general opinion, have been found to appreciate in a wonderful degree the value of the rapid transmission by wire. The telegraph is being carried from north to south, and from east to west, along the Yangize and Canton Rivers. A line is working in Formosa. Begun with such vigor, there is reason to believe that the network will rapidly spread over the land. The telephone and electric light have made their way into China. Although the first railway constructed in China, from Shanghai to Woosung, opened and closed in 1876, was not approved by the government—the line being bought and removed to the shores of Formosa, where it now lies—the steam engine is at work. This is on a line to the Kaiping coal mines, a distance of six miles and a half, constructed by Li Hang Chang. Machinery has been introduced not only at the Kaiping mines, but elsewhere. The superstitions regarding shafts dug through the earth, the "dragon's veins," are giving way. Mines are being promoted by the Chinese in various parts, but with great rashness, the fact that mines are utterly useless without communication not having been grasped. Gas has long been in use at Shanghai. The flotilla of thirty steamers, with a tonnage of some 30,000 tons, started by the China Merchants' Company, has not been a pecuniary success as yet, mainly owing, however, to mal-administration during the speculative crisis. Insurance companies are at work at Hong Kong and Shanghai, doing an important and increasing business. In military matters, while the late Franco-Chinese difficulty has clearly shown the imperfect condition of the Chinese forces, important changes have been effected. The most important have been the arming bodies of men with the breech-loader, the drilling of Li's force, the establishment of dockyards, the introduction of torpedoes, Krupp guns, transports, and gunboats on the European models. The fact that the military organization is wretched and the administration corrupt does not vitiate the fact of progress having been made. The native press has made considerable strides. Commenced in 1863 with the Shun-Pao, there are now some half-dozen papers in China. Their influence is considerable and is extending rapidly. As a proof of their enterprise it may be mentioned that the Shun-Pao sent a "special correspondent" to Tonquin to follow the operations, though he very wisely thought discretion the better part of valor and declined to land on his arrival at Haiphong.—London Times Correspondence.

Read to Learn Something.

It is a mistake to suppose that the more a person reads the wiser he will grow, as a matter of course. I know a young girl of perhaps fourteen, who is a devourer of the story sort. Every spare minute she gives to the business, and travels through the columns at a most rapid pace. But it seems exactly like pouring water through a sieve. Not a valuable idea stays in the mind. The whole attention is absorbed in finding out "how the story turns out," with no reference whatever to its teachings. Daniel Webster, when a boy, obtained more information from a farmer's almanac than she would from whole shelves full of books read in that manner.

Indeed, such reading weakens the mind instead of strengthening it. Nor does it soften the heart toward real suffering to have the feelings touched or even greatly moved by fictitious sorrows. Even a high admiration of self-denial and moral heroism in a favorite character, leads to no corresponding action in the reader's life. Rather all demands upon her sympathy and self-denial make her only peevish and irritable. Have you ever seen an absorbed reader of fiction weeping over a pathetic tale, but indignant when a tired mother called her off to attend to neglected duties? How angrily the thread of everyday work is taken up, and how little her presence contributed to lighten the home cares! Any reading that has such an effect on the mind is an evil of a decided character, and of most serious magnitude. A well-written story which has a decided point to it is a relaxation to both mind and body; but stories of perverted moral sentiment, where black is invariably painted white, are only pernicious, destroying both soul and body.

Read for a purpose, and make the points of the book your own. If a story is read for recreation, let it be a good one in the truest sense, and do not make such the sole literary food. When we have found an author who sets our minds at work in a laudable direction, we have opened a good mine. There are some writers, who stop us, in effect, in every half page or less, with new trains of thought which their words have awakened, and better still, they set us doing as well as thinking. Cultivate such helpful friends and you will then secure the noblest of high improvement. After the habit is once formed of reading for a high and noble purpose, it will be found a source of enjoyment never dreamed of in the old days when reading was only an amusement.

The Chicago Inter-Ocean recently called attention to the fact that although hundreds of women hold positions of financial trust in the country, we have yet to hear of one of them being guilty of embezzlement or defalcation.

ORE SHIPMENT.—A trial shipment of three tons of ore was made from the Kearsarge mine this week. The ore was sent to San Francisco.

GRAND JURY.—The Grand Jury list was made out to day, and the members will be notified to meet on the first Monday in December.

FOOT CRUSHED.—Walter James had his foot severely crushed last week by a heavy bar of bullion falling upon it. He is able to get around on crutches.

MILL STARTED.—The mill at Snow's Canyon was started up last week. Mr. Eddy has a good stock of ore ready and expects to keep the mill running steadily for a long time.

A PROMISING CAMP.—Recent developments in the Sylvania claims, Deep Springs district, are very promising. Several mines now being prospected are showing good bodies of ore. This is a new camp, not formerly heard of outside of the district.

BOY HURT.—Yesterday afternoon while some children were playing in the yard at the residence of Sheriff Gregg, a boy named Stevie Morehouse fell and hurt his head so severely that he was unconscious for several hours. The lad is yet quite weak but appears to be improving.

DECAPITATED.—A few days ago a young lady living near town, on entering her room found a cat trying to caress her canary. The cat was instantly taken into an embrace so close that the lover of the lady might have enjoyed it, but the cat did'nt. There is now a bloody chasm between the ears and the shoulders of the cat. It is a good cat now.

FINE STOCK.—The one business that will pay the farmers of Inyo best, that will give them the largest profit with the least labor, is stock raising. Mr. Muller, of Big Pine, has made experiments for eleven years, till he has demonstrated that graded Durham is the breed best suited to the soil and climate of this valley. He now has a number of fine young bulls of this breed for sale. See his advertisement in another column.

FIRE.—There was a fire in Virginia City last Tuesday night. The Enterprise says it was started by an incendiary in a two-story frame building on C street, just north of Cooper's Hall. What the object of the incendiary could have been it is difficult to surmise—some think to burn Cooper's Hall. In the vicinity are a great number of frame buildings that would undoubtedly have been swept away had not the fire been promptly extinguished.

DEATH FROM OVERHEATING.—James Littleton was taken suddenly ill in the Sutro tunnel last Saturday night, with cramps in the stomach. Nothing was thought of it at first, as he had had several attacks of it before. Matters becoming serious, however, medical aid was summoned from this city, but it was of no avail. As soon as the Doctor arrived he said the unfortunate man could not live. Mr. Littleton expired Sunday morning at 10 o'clock. Deceased was a native of Ireland, aged forty-three years. He leaves a wife and five children.—Enterprise.

OFFICERS INSTALLED.—The following officers of Inyo Lodge, No. 546, I. O. G. T., were installed last Saturday night by Alexander Clark, L. D.: Geo. H. Hardy, W. C. T.; Miss May Shepherd, W. R. H. S.; Miss Sarah James, W. L. H. S.; Mrs. C. A. Gregg, W. V. T.; W. A. Chalfant, W. S.; Miss Katie Mulholland, W. A. S.; Miss Anna S. Malone, W. F. S.; S. G. Gregg, W. T.; Miss Julia Cook, W. M.; Mrs. E. P. Hardy, W. C.; A. Clark, W. I. G.; Harry Cook, W. O. G.

BLACK LEG.—This disease is now destroying young stock in Round Valley. Richard Hilton thinks the disease has been checked among his stock by the following remedy. An incision was made in the skin on the neck of the animals, and a downward opening made under the skin; into this were put a lump of saltpetre, and another of asafetida, each about the size of a bean. The animals so treated were sick for some days after the operation, but all fully recovered. All animals, sick or well, were so treated.

CHRISTMAS.—A movement is now taking shape for a thorough good time at Independence at Christmas. The arrangements have not been so far perfected as to be ready for publication, but the plan includes having special rates over the C. & C. railroad for visitors from Candelaria, and other distant places. The sports and amusements contemplated would cover as least two days, and would be varied enough to afford pleasure to various tastes. Should the proposed celebration be decided upon, there is sure to a right good time.

ANOTHER ROBBER IE OFFICE.—Last Thursday Arthur D. January, Deputy State Treasurer, was arrested at Sacramento for stealing from the State Treasury. The amount stolen amounts to $39 500, and the money was all wasted by January in betting on horse races, playing faro, shaking dice and other vicious and dissipated ways. It was notorious for months past that the man was squandering large sums of money and yet no steps were taken to guard the public funds until large sums were stolen. The Secretary of State of the preceding administration now stands charged with having stolen a large sum from the State. Change of administration does not appear to benefit the people much; it is only a change from one set of thieves to another.

Personal Mention.

John White came up from Darwin last Thursday.

J. Parish, of Lone Pine, has gone on a trip to Kern river; he expects to be absent some weeks.

Hon. P. Reddy arrived here last Thursday morning from San Francisco. He is one of the counsel in the Silva case.

Mrs. Roberts arrived at Lone Pine last Tuesday from Los Angeles, on a visit to her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Swan.

Mr. Henry Levy was called to San Francisco by telegram last Monday, in consequence of the dangerous illness of his mother.

THE SILVA CASE

A Costly Affair for the County.

Proceedings in this case were resumed last Monday morning. The case was begun on the eighth day of May last and it has been dragging along ever since. A venire of seventy-five jurors had been summoned for this occasion, and all but three answered when the roll was called. These were excused by the Court for good cause shown. Before proceeding to select a jury, Judge Conklin, on the part of the prosecution, asked for a continuance of the case till December 20th, on the ground of absence of material witnesses, to proof of which he offered certain affidavits. The Court refused a continuance, but granted Mr. Conklin till next morning to confer with other counsel, and to telegraph in relation to witnesses. When Court opened on Tuesday, counsel for Silva asked that the case be dismissed, and made a motion to that effect. Motion denied by the Court and the selection of a jury proceeded with. Out of twenty-four jurors examined, nineteen were excused and five retained when the Court adjourned on Tuesday evening. Before the Court adjourned at noon on Wednesday, a jury of twelve had been selected. Many were excused from the jury on the ground of having formed opinions from what they had already heard. The principal prosecuting witness being absent, Court was adjourned at half past three till Thursday morning. Mr. Yerington did not arrive on Thursday morning as had been expected. His deposition was received, and the reading of that and other voluminous documents occupied all of the day. Mr. Reddy, having arrived from San Francisco, took part in the proceedings. The whole of Friday was taken up in reading the testimony of witnesses, taken at previous examinations. The proceedings were very monotonous and tedious to Court, bar and jury; the voice of the reader, and the buzzing of flies making a soporific hum in the warm air of the room that tended far more to produce sleep than excite lively interest.

To-day has been mostly taken up by opening statements of opposing counsel. In the course of the statement of counsel for the accused, an exception was made by the other side to his line of argument, and the result of the debate that followed was a proposition, finally agreed to, that the jury should be taken in a body to the mine, in order that the jurors may see for themselves the condition of the mine at present. This excursion will come off next week.

NEW STORE.—W. Coplin, of San Bernardino, intends opening a watchmaking and jewelry store in Bishop Creek. Mr. Coplin is an old experienced watch maker and jeweller. See his advertisement.

BULLION THIEVES.—The Calico Print says: "Last week it was discovered that about $3,000 worth of bullion had been stolen from the retort house at the Waterman mill, and immediately Mr. Jas. Waterman came to Daggett, ordered posters printed offering a liberal reward for the arrest and conviction of the thieves and the recovery of the bullion, which were posted up in the various camps. Assisted by Deputy Constables Y. R. Stevens and John Medlin, and also an Indian, Mr. Waterman made thorough search for the thieves and the bullion. In a couple of days their efforts were rewarded. The sagacious Indian who accompanied them tracked the thieves to Hinckley station, where they captured them. The bullion was also found in the neighborhood of the mill. The parties arrested are two young men by the names of Chas. and Fred Sattler, one about eighteen years old, and the other about twenty-two. They were examined before Judge Johnson last Monday, and bound over to appear before the Superior court in the sum of $3,000. Deputy Sheriff Wolker took the prisoners to San Bernardino on the afternoon train.

IMPROVING.—Wm. Callihan, the Deputy Sheriff who was wounded at Lundy, is improving slowly. The Bodie Free Press says: Dr. Rogers, assisted by Dr. Todd, made an incision in his leg in an operation yesterday, and successfully removed several bone splinters. Dr. Rogers considered that the proper time had just about elapsed for such an operation, and says the chances for recovery are favorable. He keeps the wound in shape for the removal of shattered bones that may cause trouble in the future. Callihan underwent the operation without taking chloroform and without flinching.

RATIFICATION.—The ratification party last Monday night was a great success. The Court room was filled by as jolly a company as ever met together; in fact, it was evident from the general kindness and courtesy that prevailed, that politics had been forgotten for the time, and the ratification was made but an excuse for friends to meet together and have a good time. Mr. Henry Levy deeply regretted not being present at the supper tables to attend to the guests of the successful candidates; but a telegram summoned him to the bedside of his aged and ailing mother, and his place was well filled by his brother, Mr. Chas. Levy. The defeated candidates in the late contest will be glad on another occasion to return the compliment to their now successful rivals.

NEARER HOME.—Now the election excitement has cooled down perhaps some attention will be given to a matter of great importance to Inyo county alone. The enormous expenses of the county must be reduced. The tax payers may well say "my burden is greater than I can bear" An amendment to the county governments bill, providing for a reasonable reduction of salaries of county officers, ought to be presented and pushed through at the next Session of the Legislature. Steps ought to be taken at once to prepare such an amendment. If the people themselves do not attend to the matter, no relief will be had. One or more tax payers might be elected from each Superior district, and these with the Supervisors, meet at Independence and fix a reasonable salary for each county office, the same to be embodied in an amendment to the bill. Some better plan than this may be suggested, but whatever is done should be done without delay. Eternal growling would not mend the matter, a little timely effort will.

JIM BECKWOURTH.

A Famous Scout who Became Chief of an Indian Tribe.

In Plumas County there is a fertile mountain valley in the heart of the Northern Sierras, where for some years Beckwourth, the famous trapper, guide, Indian chief, and frontiersman lived. The animals of Western adventure contained no more interesting figure than swarthy Jim Beckwourth, the discoverer, in 1851, of this mountain pass. The writer has met many persons, army officers and civilians, who knew Beckwourth, and has talked with gold-hunters whom this fearless guide led across the Sierras in 1851.

Beckwourth was born in Fredericksburg, Va., in 1798. His father had been an officer in the revolution. About 1805 the family removed to Missouri, and settled twelve miles below St. Charles, in a region still called Beckwourth's Settlement. When only 19 years old Jim Beckwourth became the hunter for Colonel R. M. Johnson's expedition to treat with the Sacs and Foxes, and work lead mines in the Galena regions. It was not long before Beckwourth joined General Ashley's Rocky Mountain Fur Company. From 1817 until he started for California in 1844, his life was a succession of hairbreadth escapes, of fortunes made and lost, and Indian battles. He served under Bent and Sublette in the West, and with General Jessup during the Seminole war in Florida. He even became First Counselor of the Crow Nation, and finally their head chief, leading them in countless forays against the Sioux and Blackfeet. He always protected the persons and property of whites while he was the ruler, of the Crows. His popularity with the tribe, whom he ruled with a rod of iron, was due to his wonderful knowledge of Indian nature and his unsurpassed moss-trooper instincts. He was never so happy as when in the saddle, leading a war partly by night marches to assault Liban or Comanche encampments, or to stampede their horses and dash away again like a whirlwind. One of the dozen or more Indian names he had meant, in English, "Enemy of horses."

One of Beckwourth's famous feats was accomplished about 1822, when he was near the Snake River, trapping beaver. He was pursued by over 200 Indians, and ran all day without food or water, covering, it is believed, not less than ninety-five miles before he reached Sublette's camp. This feat ranks in the tales of the West with Bent's famous ride twenty years later. In 1836, while Beckwourth was in St. Louis and was still chief of the Crows, a foolish trapper told the tribe that he had been killed. They at once surrounded Fort Cass with thousands of warriors to take immediate vengeance. After much parley a truce of three months was agreed upon until word could be sent to Beckwourth to come and rescue the beleaguered fort, which contained $100,000 worth of goods. A trapper named Pappen was paid $1,000 to deliver the message to Beckwourth, and the Crows encamped to await results. The fur company paid Beckwourth $5,000 and all expenses to return at once, and he rode, with two companions, the entire distance in fifty days, and saved the fort from distruction.

After this he traded in New Mexico, and in 1844 led an expedition to California, reaching Los Angeles in January, 1844. He was one of the most active of the revolutionists in 1845, under General Castro, being leader of the thirteen American riflemen who first joined Castro. He was lieutenant of the subsequent corps of 160 which captured the pueblos of Santa Barbara and Monterey, defeating Sutter's forces. When in 1847 war was declared in Mexico, Beckwourth and his company of trappers, numbering less than a dozen, collected over 1,800 horses in the Los Angeles region, and, starting eastward, reached the Arkansas in safety. He then carried dispatches from Fort Leavenworth to Santa Fe and other points. On one occasion he rode 913 miles in fifteen days. In 1848 he returned to California.

Here he helped to bring to justice the perpetrators of the Reed murders near San Miguel, where a respected English family and their servants, eleven in all, were killed. The ranch was twenty-five miles from the nearest house, and Beckwourth was the person who discovered the deed not an hour after it was committed. He rode seventy-two miles that night, and collected a band of forty men, to whom twenty more were added the next day. They separated, and Beckwourth, with twenty men, overtook the fourteen desperadoes who had killed the family in order to get $1,000 worth of gold dust. In the attack two or three of the murderes were killed, and the others were captured, tried by lynch law, and shot. After this Beckwourth became a familiar figure at the gold camps of the Sierras, from Hangtown to Shasta.

Beckwourth was rather under medium size, but possessed of great strength and endurance. He was famous for his vivid descriptive powers in telling of his adventures. He died in his lonely cabin a score of years ago, a vagrant of the wilderness, an uneducated, kind-hearted frontiersman, less noble than Boone and Carson, yet not unworthy of companionship.

"But, oh, papa, George and I love each other so devotedly." 'I don't care, I say you shall not marry him. How on earth can he support the daughter of a wealthy merchant when his salary is only $5,000 a year?" But, papa, you forget he is your confidential clerk, your trusted employe." "What of that?" "Why, he probably owns more of the store than you do already.

ROCKING THE BABY.

I hear her rocking the baby—
Her room is next to mine—
And I fancy I feel the dimpled arms
That round her neck entwine,
As she rocks and rocks the baby
In the room just next to mine.

I hear her rocking the baby
Each day when the twilight comes,
And I know there's a world of blessing and love
In the "baby-bye" she hums.

I can see the restless fingers
Playing with "mamma's rings,"
The sweet, little, smiling, pouting mouth
That to hers in kissing clings,
As she rocks and sings to the baby,
And dreams as she rocks and sings.

I hear her rocking the baby
Slower and slower now,
And I hear her leaving her good-night kiss
On its eyes and cheek and brow.

From her rocking, rocking, rocking,
I wonder would she start
Could she know, through the wall between us,
She is rocking on a heart?
While my empty arms are aching
For a form they may not press,
And my empty heart is breaking
In its desolate loneliness,

I list to the rocking, rocking
In the room just next to mine,
And breathe a prayer in silence
At a mother's broken shrine,
For the woman who rocks the baby
In the room just next to mine.

SUNSET CAROLS.

No earthly music charms the ear,
And none with rapture fills the breast
Like songs of birds, that rise in clear,
Soft tones, before the hourof rest.

Sweetly their carols through the wood
Resound; and softly trills each strain
As the descending sun its flood
Of golden light sheds o'er the main.

They move the heart to ecstacy,
And thrill far sweeter than a rush
Of harp notes from a willow tree,
Or minstrels' song at evening's hush.

Were there no refuge for the soul,
No future state to gain or lose,
Beyond what mortals might control,
And I the power had, I would choose

A bower beside some lonely spring,
With sunset glories falling never,
Where I might hear such carols ring,
And there remain transfixed forever.

—T. L. Murphy.

A Joy Forever.

Much has been written about making the farmhouse beautiful, but little, comparatively, about how to make a beautiful home with the plain materials obtainable in almost all places where any farmer would undertake to make a dwelling. If one may judge by the farmhouses one sees in the Middle and the Western States, in the eyes of nine out of ten farmers the beautiful house is a box having its gable toward the road, a wing at one side, and a coat of glaring white. If any further finish is required a liberal number of scrolls, brackets, and other "ornaments," artistically carved out of soft pine by the jig-saw genius, will be stuck on with a few finishing nails, and the work is done. When the cheap paint, mixed with a liberal quantity of turpentine, has had a short time in which to dry—and but a very short period is required, since no slow-drying linseed oil is there to hinder—the "gingerbread work" will begin to withdraw from a connection which was at best but slight, and in time what was intended as an adornment becomes an unsightly evidence of pretense sunk into shabby decay. An erroneous notion of economy in house building, and a blind conservatism, cause much of the sameness, discomfort, and positive ugliness of country homes. He would receive little credence who would say to a man about to build a house, to cost say a thousand dollars, that the first thing to do is to sit down quietly with his wife and lay out the best plan they can, keeping constantly in view the convenience and comfort of the housewife; and that the next thing necessary is to employ some thoroughly skilled architect to make the plans, specifications, and a sketch showing how the house will look when built. For this work, where he is not to supervise the building, the architect will probably charge 3½ per cent. of the cost of the proposed house, or $35. It is not unlikely that nine men out of ten who are about to build homes for their families, will declare that money spent in that way would be money thrown away; but if an architect cannot save enough for his principal in planning a house to cost perhaps no more than half a thousand, to equal his commission, he is a poor architect indeed. The probability is that the architect will make the cost so much less than it would be if intrusted to the average country carpenter and builder, that the owner could well afford to double the commission, and then go through life feeling that he had got by far the best end of a very good bargain.

It would surprise many to learn that where the cost of the house is limited to a small sum, the most cozy, homelike, and beautiful little dwellings can be built with the plainest and least costly of materials, and without a trace of the tawdry pine imitations of heavy arches, brackets, and cornices now so common. Dwellings built in this way never lose the beauty that comes of distinctive character, but grow more attractive as they grow old. At the same time they have the advantage of being thoroughly comfortable, durable, and honest—fit homes in which to bring up honest, plain, and happy families.

Somewhere in the world there must be great and good men who are positively without sin; but they are never heard of in a political convention except they go there to make the opening prayer.

The newest thing in weddings, inaugurated at the Reed wedding, New York, is to send invitations and cards to Queen Victoria and the nobility of Europe. It is extremely "tony," and it stops nothing but the postage.

Promiscuous Indorsement.

It seems to me that as a people we are too prone to loan our opinion to Tom, Dick and Harry, in such a manner as to assist said Tom, Dick or Harry in the sale of his wares. Perhaps this is not essentially an American characteristic. I have not been abroad for several years lately, owing to shrinkage of values in New Jerusalem mining stock and second mortgage bonds of the Blue Tail Fly Consolidated, so I may be a little erroneous in hazarding this statement, but are we not a nation of indorsers and encouragers, aiders and abetters of James Crow's nostrums and soaps and ready reliefs and pain paralyzers, and good Samaritan garroters generally? Opinion puts it pretty strong in its editorial warning to the slimy army of quacks who haven't the courage to go out on the road with a sand bag and carving knife and rob humanity with the rest of the thieves, but none too strong.

People indorse all kinds of stuff in a way that smells so strongly of venality and corruption that the thinking mind turns from the indorsement with intense nausea. I do not know whether that word nausea is spelled correctly or not. I do not know that I ever used it before in one of my scientific articles, but it is being used a great deal this season in "the states," and is giving good satisfaction wherever it has been tried.

Of course you should purchase the opinion of a great statesman favorable to a brand of cigars by simply allowing him to smell the box. Neither could you obtain the indorsement of a toilet soap by simply giving an eminent divine ten per cent. off on regular price; but in many cases these favorable opinions do certainly convey the idea of bribery and corruption. I give a letter below which has never been published, and which, though honestly written, was suppressed by the recipients through a mistaken notion of the eternal fitness of things.

TEASPOON LAKE, Me., July 10, '84.

Messrs, Annanias & Sapphira, Proprietors of Dr. Tapeworm's Night Blooming Liver Polish and Gall Gleanser, New York:

GENTLEMEN: Your favor of the 3d inst., inclosing P. O. money order for letter of indorsement for your celebrated Night Blooming Liver Polish and Gall Cleanser, was duly received, but owing to the celebration of the nation's natal day, and a slight feeling of regret bordering on delirium triangles, I have not been able to prepare the letter of indorsement until now.

In 1879 I had a great deal of pain just northwest of the kidneys, and about due west of the spleen, as the crow flies. Doctors could do nothing for me, and life became to me a hollow mockery, utterly devoid of fun. My liver became swollen to the size of a bushel-basket, I should judge, or larger, if you think best—use your own judgment as to that—and my gall became abnormally large also. I suffered extremely from excruciating pains. Excruciating pains are always more or less painful, or at least they were in my own case. I became so low and weak that my creditors despaired of my recovery. My large business as deputy clerk of School District No. 11 required my presence at my office every day, and yet the pain was so excruciating, as aforesaid, that I could hardly drag myself up the stairs, and when I returned I had to slide down the banisters.

I became cross and irritable in the extreme, frequently throwing my wife over the hen house while suffering from hypochondria. I never was unkind to my wife prior to this attack of enlarged gall, and my devotion to her was generally admitted by total strangers everywhere; but while low-spirited, as a result of my enlarged liver, I frequently drove her into the woods with a shotgun. I would then be overwhelmed with remorse and wish her back again.

About three days ago I bought a bottle of your justly celebrated Night Blooming Liver Polisher and Gall Cleanser. It saved my life. The first evening I took a teaspoonful of your remedy, and during the night coughed up one lobe of my liver, which was much inflamed, and weighed nine pounds. From that moment I began to improve. I was soon able to attend to my arduous duties of deputy clerk of School District No. 11, to which I added those of alternate umpire in a scrub baseball game here. I now regard myself as fully recovered, and have sent a mutual friend into the woods for my wife. I am greatly indebted to you, gentlemen, and would cheerfully be more so if convenient to you. You are at liberty to use this letter in any way you see fit, subject, of course, to our arrangement. Should you have any other remedies which you desire recommended, I would be glad to recommend them at living rates.

Yours, for health,
MARTIN VAN BUREN BROWN,
Deputy Clerk School District No. 11, and Alternate Umpire Baseball Nine, pro tem.

I have other specimen letters of indorsement, but space forbids their publication at this time.

A New York bridegroom was fined $5 on Wednesday for slapping his bride of a day on the face. Married men appear to have no rights which their wives are bound to respect.

A Yankee who traveled forty miles in a car with a dozen Vassar college girls says he was forcibly reminded of the "Tour of Babel." But he did not pronounce it correctly.

MODERN SAMSONS.

Wonderful Strength of Various Men and Women.

The feast of Lulu Hurst falls into insignificance besides those of Mme. Gobert, who laid claim to no other power than uncommon physical strength. This woman, who is described as possessing a remarkably beautiful face and form, appeared first before the public at St. Bartholomew fair in London, 1818. Her achievements astonished all who beheld her. She carried weights equal to 2,016 pounds, lifted a heavy table, on which several persons were seated, with her teeth, supported an anvil weighing 400 pounds on her chest while a black-smith forged a horse-shoe upon it, and afterward tied her hair about the anvil and swung it about. The Georgia girl's chair feat was a favorite one with Mme. Gobert, and it is noteworthy that in the case of each woman this was the first branch of their performances attacked by skepticism. Whether, as was charged, her public performances were made up largely of trickery, there appears to be no doubt that she was extraordinarily strong. On one occasion while traveling her coach sunk into the mire and resisted all efforts of the horses. Descending, the female Samson easily extracted the vehicle and proceeded on her journey amid the applause of a large crowd of common people, with whom her popularity continued for years.

Derbyshire had a strong woman whom London managers sought vainly to coax from her vocation of breaking in horses. This was Miss Phœbe Brown, spinster, round and ruddy, who walked like a man and preferred a man's labor. She could easily walk forty to fifty miles in a working day, and could carry fourteen stone with ease. This maiden had a lover who ventured to displease her. His punishment was similar to that familiar to mischievous boys, their mothers and the latters' slippers, and after it was administered by the muscular Phœbe there was, her biographer naively relates, no further dissension between her and the swain. A few other strong woman are traceable through magazine literature, but a virtual monopoly of mighty things and sinews has ever been enjoyed by the male sex.

The present emperor of Russia is said to be one of the strongest men in his empire of herculean individuals. While the heir apparent he one day visited his father, the late emperor to complain that his mail was tampered with. The emperor sent for the chief of police, drew from him a confession of guilt, and chided him in the presence of the czarowitch. The latter said not a word, but handed the crestfallen functionary a sign of how great was his anger in the form of a silver rouble twisted into a roll. In his younger days this was a favorite visiting card of the czarowitch. He could strike a poker against his arm and bend it, bite pieces out of china cups, feats which were in the repertoire of Thomas Tapham, the celebrity of Islington. Tapham was a drayman, and sometimes, when exhilarated by the vast potions of liquor supplied him by admirers, would take his horse's place between the shafts. He had a playful habit of twisting heavy kitchen pokers into a coil about the necks of trembling countrymen. One night after having astonishd a travern full with his drinking powers he came upon a watchman peacefully slumbering in his box, and threw box and man over the wall of a burial ground.

In 1871 M. Gregorie, claiming to be seventy-one years old, astonished the physicians and the public of a town near London by carrying 700 pounds with ease, lifting an ox and performing other wonderful feats. A celebrated London physician who examined Gregorie describes him as an exaggerated study by Hayden. His shoulders were prodigious and his biceps almost incredible. Gregorie's strength, rather than a source of pride to him, was the cause of anxiety. Although the mildest of men, he lived in dread that he should be provoked to use his strength against a fellow being. He was afraid to nurse his own child lest he should give it a fatal squeeze.

Nearly all individuals of uncommon strength, make up in bulk what they are deficient in height. Stanley, the African explorer, describes a strong man who was six feet five inches, and rather disproportionately slender. He could toss an ordinary man ten feet in the air, and catch him in his descent. He would take one of the large white Muscat donkeys by the ear, and, with a sudden movement of his right foot, lay the surprised ass on his back. He could carry a three-year-old bullock half way around his master's plantation. Once he actually bore twelve men on his back, shoulders and chest a distance of 300 feet. Middle-aged people who remember the dawn of interest in muscular exescises recall Dr. Winship, the originator of the idea which was subsequently embodied in lifting machines. The astonishment that the doctor's performances created was equal to that of the Berliners a few years ago at Jorgnery's feats. The most wonderful of these was known as the trapeze feat. The Frenchman hung suspended by his legs from a swinging bar, and, by sheer muscular strength, lifted a heavy horse and its rider off the stage, suspending them several minutes, and then lifted them down gradually and evenly as he raised them. Merwin Thompson's achievement at Rochester, N. Y., last year was, however, in the opinion of competent judges, more surprising than this. Thompson laid face downward on a firmly fixed ladder and resisted the efforts of a team of powerful horses to pull him from that position. A newspaper writer, in reviewing this wonderful performance, remarks that the little mention with which it escaped could happen only in a nation where strong men were common.

The same feat in 1875 gave William Joy the name of the English Samson. The medical faculty of Vienna thought the strength of Joseph Pospischilli worthy of discussion at several special meetings. This man held a table suspended by his teeth while three gypsies danced upon it. He and one of his brothers bore upon their shoulders a sort of wooden bridge while a horse drawing a cart full of stones were driven over it. Pospischilli's strength was thought to reside in his back, and his bones were said to be twice as large as the usual size.

Fishing parties and explorers in the wilds of northern Wisconsin were a few years ago familiar with Peter Panquette, the Samson of the region. He was a famous woodsman, possessed of mighty endurance, and muscles that were like iron. Senator Clark says: "I have had him bare his arm to me and crack hickory nuts upon the muscles. It was like cracking them on a stone. He could take a handful of dried hard hickory nuts and crush them to pieces by merely tightening his fist." On one occasion, while serving as guard for a party of explorers, a yoke of oxen drawing the boat down the Fox gave out through fatigue. Panquette took their places, and hauled the boat along, heeding the strain less than the beasts. Sheppard, the wonder of the Coventry volunteers, whose muscular development answers to the description given of Panpuette, like the latter, wore his hair long. With the half-breed is was a custom derived from his copper-colored ancestors, but with the ruddy Englishman it was in obedience to his belief that all his strength lay in his flowing yellow locks. Sheppard could lift a heavy man in each hand, and hold them at arm's length. He could toss enormous tables, barrels and bags of flour about as though they were filled with feathers. He could take a pewter pint pot and tear it into pieces with his teeth, and he could munch large oyster shells as a person would munch a biscuit. Sheppard was the wonder of the country around, but his prosperous popularity developed enemies, and one of these, it is related, induced the strong man to drink deeply, and while sunk in stupor cut of his luxuriant hair. Sheppard awoke, felt his bare poll, and in tones of horror announced his strength was gone. Whether because such was the case, or because he wished to excite supersitious credulity, the strong man from that moment was weak, timid and hesitating until his hair grew long again.

Encouragement.

Encouragement is something that we naturally look for.

A little praise, or word of hope, or a cheering smile—something for the hungry soul to grasp and the weary mind to rest upon, as we climb the toilsome mountain of life.

How many poor hearts have sunk into despondency, when a little encouragement would have reassured them! How many have taken their lives in the hour of despair, when a friendly hand stretched out with aid might have saved them!

The child looks to its mother for help and encouragement, when it is taking its first step in walking. The school-boy looks for encouragement from his teacher when he is taking his first step in education.

And so on through life. The soldier looks for it on the field of battle; it is the cheering voice of his leader that urges him on through the dangers of death and crowns the day with victory.

The poet and the artist look to the world to acknowledge their genius and give them praise. It is encouragement which calls forth the noblest words and helps them to climb the mount of fame until they surmount all difficulties and write their names in flaming letters upon its summit.

Then let us give encouragement to each other in every effort of good, in every noble action; in the little duties of life—and we will be happier for it; the world will be better; and a smiling Providence will look down and bless our labor of love.

Abyssinian Beauties.

The Abyssinian women are divinely tall and slender, and black as the ace of spades. The features are clearly cut and regular, the eyes liquid and lips red and full. The hair is black and waving, but somewhat coarse in fiber. They dress in pure white, and the black face and red lips against the white setting of the burnous, give an effect that is as enchanting as a picture. The only fault they have about them is their limbs. Now, if any lady's limbs may appear with propriety in literature, it is the legs of a Turkish lady. Turkish modesty never goes farther than the knees. Both the trousers and feredje stop at that point, and with the majority of women the limbs and feet go bare. On fete days those who are able sport gayly-colored hose and pointed slippers of red or yellow leather, walking on wooden pattens to keep them out of the filth But the Abyssinian women seem to prefer going barefoot, and thus betray the one peculiarity that stamps them as daughters of Ham. Their ankles are about as big round as a rolling pin, and it is ankle all the way up to the knees. The leg is set exactly in the middle of the foot, which is very low and flat.—Letter from Constantinople.

The Parlor Daughter.

A great deal of fault is found with the parlor daughter. It is said of her that she sits at the piano and sings, "What is Home Without a Mother?" while the mother in question is toiling over the fire in the basement. No doubt this is true, for the parlor daughter nearly always has a kitchen mother, a good, plain, sensible woman who says: Young people will be young people," and takes every burden from her pretty daughter's shapely shoulders to put them on her own, already bowed down with care.

So you see it is often the mother's own fault that there is a parlor girl. She loves this daughter and wants her to enjoy life while she is young; so she does the work of a servant herself, and is happy in so doing. She loves to hear Lottie play on the piano. It seems to her that she could work all day to the accompaniment of "Silver Threads." She has been all her life trying to learn one tune and has never accomplished it yet. And Lottie is pretty and has white hands with taper fingers, and goes to a manicure. The parlor daughter had no trouble to educate her mother up to all these advanced ideas. She was a willing pupil. She remembered what a hard time she had when she was young, and goes to the other extreme with Lottie, who does nothing but amuse herself, and must have help to do that. She is stylish, and it pays to dress her well. She has a knack for fancy work, painting and accomplishments that to the mother indicate genius. She writes a lovely hand, and has plenty of correspondents. She takes books from the library, and belongs to a literary club. Her young friends do not work, why should she?

The only reason why she should work is to show that she possesses a spark of gratitude; that she has too much respect for her mother who has done so much for her to let her wear out her declining years in the routine of housework, while she plays the role of parlor ornament; that she knows in her secret soul, that labor ennobles instead of degrades, that the key of the kitchen is a higher medal of honor than a diploma of idleness. Mother love is something wonderful. It is more blest in giving than in receiving. But already the mother's steps are tending down the hill which she never again can climb; her hair is turning gray; her eyes are weary; she wants no unwilling drudge to help her, but a service of love. Think you, the creak, creak of that daughter's chair, as she rocks to and fro in the parlor above, is the true rhythm for her to work by or the tinkling of the piano keys, touched by her satin-smooth fingers, a tremolo of love? Is it a good or loving heart that will read the thrilling romances of Mrs. Southworth or May Fleming with bated breath and falling tears, while a pale, tired mother is washing dishes in the kitchen? It may be the mother's fault—the fault of a too generous, too unselfish love; but if the daughter has a good heart will she take advantage of such mistaken kindness? Will she not rather prove herself

"A creature not too bright or good
For human nature's daily food."

And refuse at once and forever so anomalous a position as that of Parlor Daughter in a home that must be sustained by a Kitchen Mother? No young man with brains will ever expect to find a good wife in a young woman who is not at first a good daughter.

Thought It Was the Cats.

"If I can find my gun, I bet I'll settle them cats," said Mulberry the other night at a late hour, as he slid out of bed and went groping around the room in the dark.

"Come back to bed, you old fool," pleaded the gentle voice of Mrs. Mulberry. "That isn't cats; it's Emeline's new beau down in the parlor singing 'Sweet Violets.'"

Emeline's new beau will not warble any more when he visits Emiline. Emiline has told him that "Papa is very easily disturbed after he retires.'

A Right Smart Western Town.

"Yes, sir," said an enthusiastic citizen of a new western town, "we've got a right smart town, stranger. Why," he continued impressively, "it's only six months old yet, and it's got two hotels, forty-eight beer saloons, twenty-seven gambling places, four drug stores, to say nuthin' of grocery and clothin' stores, and the best half-mile track west of the Missouri."

"Any churches?" asked the stranger.

"Any what?"

"Churches."

"You mean them buildin's with a long pint stickin' up in the air."

"Yes."

"No, we hain't got any of them. Thar was some talk about buildin' one, but we finally allowed it would look too dudish."

An astute London club man says that when he hears so much of scandals in lives of political candidates in the United States he is reminded of the old story of Dr. Johnson: "Oh, doctor," said a lady to him one day, "there are a great many naughty words in your dictionary!" "Hum, madam," said the great lexicographer, "you've been looking for them."

"I would die for you," she exclaimed, pillowing her head upon his shoulder. "Oh, no, you needn't, darling," was the quick reply, "I like red hair."

A New York editor who had been for a long time undetermined in his preferences, has at last found some one whom he can support. He got married.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.:

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 22,..... 1884.

NINE new Cardinals have been raised to that dignity by the Pope.

THE New York "World", declares the Independents have no claim to place in the Cabinet under Mr. Cleveland. No body but an Independent ever supposed that any such claim would be recognized.

Thomas Island, J. C. Eddy, E. H. Edwards, and Charles Anthony were all witnesses on the Silva case this week, and all were very glad when they were permitted to go home.

EVERY working man in the United States, every American citizen, no matter what his politics, should read the short speech delivered by Mr. Blaine at Augusta a few days ago. The speech should not only be read, but "chewed and digested."

THE people of Nevada are strongly urging the members of the Legislature to confine their labors to a session of thirty days. The California legislators would please their constituents immensely by leaving off at the end of thirty days palaver.

SOME miners, who have been prospecting near the summit of Mount Davidson, near Virginia, claim to have uncovered ore at the depth of 20 feet, which assays $39 per ton. In Inyo twenty ore of this grade would not be considered a very valuable find.

AN immense lake, supposed to be at least as large as Lake Superior, has lately been discovered in the far northern regions of Canada. It is stated that the Hudson Bay Company have had their agency there for upward of 100 years, but have held it a secret that a lake of such dimensions ever existed.

SOME one asked Theodore Roosevelt what caused the defeat of Blaine. He answered "A combination of untowardness." It is an immense relief to have such an assurance from so knowing a man; this is decidely better than to be compelled to admit that the defeat was the result of a want of public confidence.

THE preliminary survey for a railroad between Calico and Dagget has been completed. The Calico Print says; "If the railroad be built it will be about six months before it will be in operation, as the contract for hauling ore from the King mine to the Ore Gaude Company's mill will not expire before that time

DURING the past year, the increase o population in Los Angeles county has been more than double that in any other county in the State for the same time. The value of land and increase of business of all kinds have been correspondingly great. These results are mainly due to the efforts made by the people of Los Angeles to make known o the world the advantages offered to settlers. Like efforts made by the people of Inyo would divert such a stream of immigration this way, as would soon settle up the vast area of good land now lying idle in the county

FRANK PAGE says he would like very much to be elected United States Senator, but not having money enough to spend, he has but small hopes of having the dignity thrust upon him. Frank knows very well that he can not be elected, he knows that he does not deserve the honor, and "conscience makes cowards of us all." The statement attributed to Mr. Page, that he has not money enough to buy the dignity, is a malicious effort to cast a slur on him who shall be elected. Most of the same kind of talk springs from malice or ignorance; the American people do not like Pretorians and Janizaries, put the dignities of the nation up for sale to the highest bidders. They who make such assertions are malicious slanderers of then more virtuous fellow citizens.

A large part of life's burdens are self-imposed and wholly needless. Fears of calamities which never happen, a doleful habit of looking at the worst, a suspicious disposition, a jealous turn of mind—these are the tyrants that load us with burdens heavy to bear and needless to carry. If we should honestly examine the various burdens of our lives, we would be surprised to find how many of them are of this character. Not only may we drop them if we will, but justice to others demands that we should. A man or woman habitually unhappy is essentially selfish, and is always a thorn in the community. There are enough crosses and trials in life which must be borne, without manufacturing artificial and needless ones; and the more thoroughly we rid ourselves of the latter, the more energy and spirit we can bring to bear upon the former.

From the Transactions, of the Bohemian Academy of Sciences, it appears that a human skull has been discovered in a clay deposit in the neighborhood of Prague, near Podbaba, about the same spot where a mammoth tusk was dug up a short time before. The present prehistoric relic has a very flat forehead, very thick eye-brow bones, and a very small facial angle. The color of the skull shows that it had long lain in diluvial loam.

How Much Sleep.

The only rule is, take enough. Old Mother Means in Eggleston's "Hoosier Schoolmaster" advised her husband when buying cheap land, "while yer a-gettin', get a-plenty." So say we in regard to sleep, a full quantity of which is more valuable than the grandest prairie farms the sun ever shone upon.

It is during the wakeful hours that the muscles and the nervous system and brain expend their energies. Muscles are partially recruited during the day by nourishment taken, but the great recuperating work of the nerves and brain is done during sleep. Such recuperation must at least equal the expenditure made through the day or else the brain is ill-nourished, wastes, withers. Persons who, in early English history, were condemned to death by being prevented from sleeping, always died raving maniacs. Persons who are starved to death suffer brain starvation also, and pass into hallucinations and then into insanity.

The use of arsenic in the arts is still very extensive, it appears, in the workshops of Paris and other centers of industry in Europe, notwithstanding its known deleteriousness, its main use being an ingredient of green coloring pigments. Into one of these it enters as the arsenite of copper, known as "Scheele's green," and into another as the aceto-arsenite of copper, or "Schweinfurt's green"—the name of emerald or mineral green being also applied indifferently to either. Of these two colors, the first contains fifty-five per cent., or more than one-half, of white arsenic; the other, in every one hundred grains, contains fifty-eight of arsenic. Both of these pigments furnish most attractive and durable shades of green, each of comparatively small cost, and, as the process of manufacture involves no special skill, large quantities are used, notwithstanding their injuriousness.

Notes on Science and Industry.

The enamelling of cast-iron ware, according to a new German process, is accomplished without pickling the castings, as has ordinarily been the practice, the first or basic coating applied, instead, directly to the iron as soon as it has been mechanically cleaned or scoured. The system in question is based on the theory that the enamel adheres to the white iron better than to gray, because the latter contains a mixture of uncombined carbon—graphite—and hence the articles to be enameled should be cast in iron, the surfaces of which are free from graphite. To effect this, the mould in which the iron is cast is made of damp sand covered with a substance that will take up carbon and remove it, the best substance for this purpose being sulphur, which combines with the free graphite to form sulphide of carbon, which burns as soon as formed. The condition in this respect is fulfilled by dusting the moulds with fine sulphur powder, either alone or mixed with pulverized quartz or charcoal dust. The mixture contains more or less sulphur, according to the quality of the iron used, but always enough to convert the surface of the iron. The graphite is removed finally by coating it with sulphuric acid of 60 degrees B. and then ignited.

The name of boroglyceride is given to a new chemical compound, described by the Scientific Press. It is only a short time since it was discovered that boracic acid forms, with glycerine, compounds analagous to the natural fatty matter of fats, as oleine, palmatine, etc., in which the boracic acid replaces the fatty acid; one hundred parts of glycerine dissolved by a temperature of 180 to 220 degrees F., sixty-seven parts of crystallized boracic acid to a thick syrup, which, by continued heating, expels water vapors to a large extent, and forms after cooling a hyaline mass. This mass is soluble in water, and in concentrated solution the boroglyceride can be received in crystals. Its solubility in water, its lack of odor, colorlessness, and the fact that it has not the corosive and poisonous qualities of carbolic acid, render it peculiarly suitable for surgical purposes. In the mining laboratory it may be employed as reducing flux, in cases where borax in charcoals or boracic acid and charcoals are employed together; the advantage being that the carbon separated by the heat from the boroglyceride is finer, and will act more promptly and quickly.

One of the coal-cutting machines introduced in some of the English collieries consists of a compressed air-engine, with picks or cutting tools mounted on a carriage which runs on a tramway in the bank. These picks are so arranged as to cut longitudinal, horizontal, and also upright grooves, to the desired depth or extent, into the upright face of the work, thus dividing the work to be done into rectangular portions or sections, each of these being bounded by grooves on three or four sides. On the corriage can be applied any required number of picks or lever handles, moving on axes, and, as these are crank levers, one end of the pick is applied, while at the other the lever is acted on directly—hence, as the carriage is moved at intervals along the face of the work, the picks make the requisite horizontal longitudinal grooves in the upright face of the work. The cutter is so framed that a pick can be worked either on the right or left hand side of the bank, and this pick can also be elevated or depressed, so as to suit the ordinary or extraordinary dip of the strata. The compressed air is applied in vulcanized India-rubber movable pipes from iron tubes laid down in the principal workings.

It is claimed that a fire-proof material superior to all others now in use has been invented. In some experiments made to test its value, a a box of iron (gun metal) a quarter of an inch thick, having a lining of the new material, was placed on the hot coals of a boiler fire having an estimated heat of 3,590 degrees F.: in about nine minutes bright drops of melted iron began to drop through the grate, and, when the box was dragged out of the fire, after twenty-two minutes, the bottom was burned entirely off and the sides were a red and incandescent mass. The box was cooled by water, the fire-proof material was penetrated with a trowel, and pieces of paper barely warm and not the least singed were taken out. A lead pipe, covered to the thickness of about an inch by the fire-proof material, remained in the fire half an hour, and, when taken out, was as hard as before, and the papers inside of it were unsinged. Again, a box lined with the material and framed outside with laths, was filled with hot coals; the heat emitted made approach to it uncomfortable, but the lining of the box within less than an inch of the coals appeared to the touch to have the ordinary temperature of stone or cold iron.

Recent developments in the photographic art are announced in England, and have attracted considerable attention. The most important of these is a process by which a printing block, etched or engraved on zinc, and ready for use on any printing press, can be produced by photography and machinery from any object which can be photographed, this being done without the aid of a draughtsman or engraver. The manipulation, indeed, is said to be so rapid as to render the process applicable to the illustration of daily newspapers. The views and portraits thus far produced by this operation are pronounced soft and effective, showing that the invention is valuable for general purposes, short of really fine art.

The electric microscope is attracting much attention among scientists. This apparatus, consists, in a few words, of a simple application of the electric light to the microscope, the result being, so far as the spectacle is concerned, an improved and enlarged kind of magic lantern—with this difference, namely, that the magnifying power is enormously in excess of that attained in the latter instrument. It is, in fact, a device which makes it impossible to exhibit in a most attractive form the appearances presented by minute natural objects when placed under the most powerful magnifying glass. The electric microscope is worked by an ordinary primary battery, and must prove immensely useful in certain scientific researches.

Fattening Stock.

The prejudice now on the high road to extinction, against precocious and symmetrical stock, has had for chief reason that the flesh of young animals was neither so succulent nor so nutritive as of old animals. Whether that was ill or well-founded, the opinion of the pounds, shillings, and pence farmers was that it was more profitable to sell off a fat ox when two years old than when four; a sheep at fourteen months, and a pig at eight. It has been demonstrated that the quantity of meat produced by stock delivered to the butcher at the above precocious ages costs exactly one-half less expense. An ox sold off at two years instead of at four, implies a double profit in point of meat realized for the market, the return of the capital invested in half less time, the allowing of the sheds to be occupied with double the number of stock without any augmented demand on food.

It has been alleged that an ox aged four years yields a greater or a heavier quantity of flesh than an ox of two years. This requires explanation. It is now ascertained that an ox, from its birth till it is two years of age, makes as much flesh as an animal of four years, provided the young ox be fed carefully, plentifully, and methodically; that is to say, there shall be no starvation or short commons stoppages in the rations. Now, it is a law of physiological growth that the time lost by insufficient feeding, or the absence of sanitary care in the development of animals, can never be recovered. In the first two years of its growth, the assimilation of food and the formation of the tissues of an ox proceed the most actively. No food is thus lost in the system; all is applied to build up; nothing is demanded for repairs. At two years, then, the period of development terminates, and henceforward the animal has not only to feed to keep up life, but to repair the daily waste of the tissues. Thus, more food is necessary to produce a pound of flesh, when, after two years, the tissues have to be restored, than before and up to that period, when all vitality is not repairing wastes, but developing growth.

Equally erroneous is the impression that an animal must be developed fully before it can be fattened. This is quite true in the case of unameliorated races, so difficult to develop, so hard to feed, so bony and so skinny. But the wide-awake farmer does not seek such animals for fattening ends; he tries to obtain a precocious race, whether in cattle, sheep, or pigs; animals well formed, of agreeable conformation, pleasing to the eye, and so more certain to prove satisfactory for the purse. As to the alleged inferiority in quality of young over aged meat, ask any judge at a cattle show; note their awards; inquire of any butcher if a well-bred, well-fed ox at two years has not a more agreeable flesh, or, if you like, as good as the ordinary animal aged four; if a sheep similarly cured, aged one year, does not produce meat as highly relished as the animal double its age? In thus patronizing younger stock, capital is doubled, and profits increased one hundred per cent. without any augmentation under the heads of food or labor.—

The inventor of an electric apparatus for deaf people claims that no ear is so dead that it cannot be made to hear, and that in many cases the apparatus will cure deafness. It may be concealed in a cane, umbrella handle, fan or any such article of convenience.

The Rev. E. B. Snyder, D. D., of Philadelphia, has gone to south Florida to select a tract of forty thousand acres of land, which will be purchased for the purpose of locating a colony thereon. Fourteen families of Philadelphia have already joined the colony, and others will join.

A married masher in an Ohio town has been cowhided by two young women. He is doubtless only too glad that, instead of thrashing him, they did not tell his wife.

Lulu Hurst, the "Georgia Wonder," is at Saratoga. She is going to demonstrate her great strength by raising a week's board.

Late Raspberries.

In the Germantown Telegraph, which always has an excellent agricultural department, are the following seasonable suggestions about late raspberries, which fruit is too little appreciated by farmers and others who have land on which to raise luxuries of the kind. The fall varieties usually begin to mature about the middle of August, and continue bearing until severe frosts come. They have frequently lasted until the last week of October, and on rare occasions until near the middle of November. The best variety for a fall crop is the Catawissa, though the Belle de Fontenay is also a very good kind. This, however, suckers profusely, and is objectionable on this account; while the Catawissa scarcely suckers at all, the new vines being derived from burying the end of the cane in the ground or layering them. After the latter is done growing for the season and having lost its leaves, the canes should be cut down close to the ground and covered with manure over winter. For it must be remembered that the fall crop is borne on the new wood, or the only wood that remains after removing the bearing canes of the season. If the canes were allowed to bear as other raspberries, the first or summer crop would be very meagre, and the fall would be still less, and neither worth growing. By cutting away the canes after the fall crop is gathered, and the shoots covered with rich manure, it produces very strong cane the ensuing year, and hence a full and satisfactory crop of berries in the autumn. The Catawissa is a perfectly hardy plant, a single cane having been discovered in the old town of Catawissa, in this State (Pennsylvania), from which all were propagated. Though the fruit matures at a time when we have many other of our best standard fruits, still it will be found for the tea table very desirable, and not likely to be abandoned after being tried. Most of our nurseries have it, and in a couple of months it will be time to set out a bed. Before doing so, remove all the wood as we have already advised, and plant full as deep as it stood in the nursery.

RE-ELECTED.—At a meeting of stockholders of the Carson and Colorado R. R., held in San Francisco last Tuesday, the old Board of Directors were re-elected.

BULLION SHIPMENTS.—J. Eddy made a shipment of 150 lbs. bullion last weed, from the Snow's canyon mill. The bullion was gold and silver. Another bar of about equal weight is now ready for shipment.

HAND HURT.—A few days ago while at work in his flouering mill, Mr. A. N. Bell had his right hand caught in the machinery and severely hurt. No bones were broken, but the hand is very much mangled and bruised, and it will be many weeks before Mr. Bell can use it. In the mean time the mill is kept running as usual.

PHOTOGRAPHER COMING.—John A. Hanson, photographer, is at Bishop Creek, where he will stay till the end of this month. He will come to Big Pine about December 1st, and stay about ten days; then he will move to Independence. Mr. Hansen invites every one to his studio, to examine his work.

A. CARD.—The undersigned tender their sincere thanks to the people of Bishop Creek generally. and friends in particular, for their sympathy and assistance so kindly extended to them in their late affliction.

HORSES FOR SALE.—Ten brood mares and eight young horses, all of good strain, for sale at market rates. I have good pasture from now until next Spring, for one hundred and fifty head of stock, and will agree to turn the animals out in good condition when the term of pasturage ends. Terms reasonable. Apply to CHARLES A. LEVY,
Bishop Creek, Cal.

BLACK SAND.—A good deal has been said and written about the value of black sand. The following from the Virginia Chronicle is good evidence in the case: "The value of 'black sand' deposits in Storey and Lyon counties, about which so much has recently been written, is vastly overrated by most people. Long before the late Conrad Wiegand's brain had been turned by furnishing material for 'Senator Jones' great silver speech,' Mr. Wiegand entertained the opinion that these deposits were of great value. At his request the writer, who was then engaged in surface mining, furnished him with a wagon load of the 'black sand.' Mr. Wiegand made more than a hundred assays and tests of the stuff without getting a trace of the precious metal, and so satisfied himself that the writer's theory was correct; that 'black sand' is nothing but ground iron that has been pulverized by attrition and the action of the water. This iron does not contain a particle of gold. At frequent intervals some crank who has been gorging himself with theoretical mineral knowledge, rises in his seat and comes to the front with some startling statement of the existence of the precious metals in deposits heretofore considered worthless. These theorists should be compelled to get out for a season or two in company with an old prospector, and tramp over hot deserts nearly barefooted, parched with thirst and almost famished with hunger; to lie down at night without covering, surrounded by hooting coyotes, with fiery eyeballs glaring and ugly teeth snapping in expectation of feasting on his carcass when his breath says good-by to him. The knowledge acquired after a preliminary course of this kind is usually safer to rely upon than a roomful of scented experts from Frieburg or Swansea."

KEELERITES CELEBRATED.—A correspondent at Keeler writes: "There was a grand Democratic rally at Keeler, in honor of the election of Grover Cleveland as President of the United States. Large bonfires were built at the junction of Railroad Drive and Malone street that illuminated the town and the country for miles around. Having lots of cheering ability, but not much oratorical material, the celebrators called upon Hon. J. M. Keeler, Republican Assemblyman from this district, who at once courteously responded, and made a rousing speech that was received with great applause, and copious libations of beer.—CITIZEN."

THE SILVA CASE.

On Saturday afternoon of last week Daniel Flanagan, the first witness for the defense, was put upon the stand. The examination of this witness was not finished till Monday, when Mr. Flanagan was again called for the defense. The examination was continued through the forenoon, and when counsel for defense concluded, the witness was turned over to Mr. Reddy for cross-examination. Under this ordeal Mr. Flanagan became utterly confused, made the most contradictory statements, and at last blurted out: "I don't know what I am saying; I am all puzzled and confused."

The examination of witnesses was continued through Monday and Tuesday. Witnesses were severely cross-examined, and the most minute circumstances in connection with the case were brought out. All of Wednesday was taken up with the examination of two witnesses, the wrangling of counsel occupying more time than the giving of evidence. Thursday Mr. J. C. Eddy was on the stand most of the day. Before Court adjourned for the day, Mr. Reddy, for the prosecution, proposed that counsel of both sides agree to a limited time for argument, and by holding a night session, close the case and leave it with the jury on Saturday. The opposing counsel refused to do this; there is therefore no chance of the case being finished till some time next week.

AND A BITTOCK.—A person traveling in country places in Scotland, if he should ask, "How far to such a place?" is almost certain to be answered, so many miles "and a bittock," the "bittock" being a greater distance than the miles. An item published in the San Francisco Chronicle on the Carson and Colorado railroad, needs a good-sized "bittock" to piece it out. The item says: "The road is a branch of the Virginia and Truckee Railroad and runs through Inyo and Mono counties. It commences at a place known as the Mound House, and is in operation for thirty or forty miles. It is expected that the entire line will be completed by the end of the present year." Now, from the Mound House to Keeler, in Inyo county, the present terminus of the C. & C. road, the distance is just 293 miles, instead of 40. The very great ignorance that prevails, even among the well-informed, of the extent of California east of the Sierra, may be judged from the above item.

BRONZE TURKEYS.—The "Bronze" is the largest, hardiest and handsomest variety of turkey, and undoubtedly originated from a cross of the wild and domesticated fowls. Having for many years been bred from the largest and finest specimens, the present great size of these turkeys is the result. Gobblers have often been found to weigh 45 pounds and some have even approached close to 50 pounds weight. The size of all kinds of domesticated fowls may by intelligent breeding, be very much increased. The large proportions of some breeds of chickens is proof of this. The bronze turkey makes an excellent cross with the common turkey, the product nearly equaling in size the pure bronze. Mr. Stewart, of Big Pine, who has had much experience in raising turkeys, says they are the most prolific he has ever kept; during the past spring his hen turkeys laid from twenty-five to fifty eggs before wanting to set. He has tried many varieties, but for general good qualities never found any other to rival the bronze.

SEEDS FREE OF COST.—A circular from the State University announces that Seeds of the kinds named below will be distributed by the College of Agriculture of the University of California to citizens of California.

Postage to the amount indicated should accompany every application.

Beyond this no charge is made. Persons applying should give their second and third choice, if the kind first named is all gone, or say that the enclosed stamps are to be returned after deducting postage on the return letter. The announcement on scions and plants to be distributed will be made later.

The distribution is made for the purpose of ascertaining the adaption to climate and practical value of the several kinds, in the different climates and soils of the State; and persons receiving them are requested to report results, weather success or failure, and if the latter, from what apparent causes.

All applications are to be addressed to Prof. E. W. Hilgard, Berkley, Alameda Co., Cal. The following cereal grains are in one pound packages; postage, 20 cents each. Six rowed barley; rice, sprat, or batle-dour barley; Frick's barley; Scotch two rowed barley; pearl barley; Imperial two rowed barley blue barley. A valuable variety of Rye; several varieties of wheat, including White Victorir, Washington, Centenial, Califoruir Spring, White Essex, Molds Red Winter and Spelt Silesian. Several fine varieties of oats, and seeds of many valuable grasses.

BLACK WATTLE.

Acacia decarrens. the black wattle or tanbark acacia of Australia: The bark of this tree, as grown on the University grounds. contains, as heretofore stated (Bulletin No. 4) over 40 per cent of tannin when in the air-dried condition, while that of the caks usuall amount to only 10 or 12. The tree is a rapid grower, and is usually stripped in its eighth or tenth year, when 30 to 40 feet high. Does well on heavy as on light soils, provided they are deep; is doubtless hardy from Sacramento southward, possily farther north on light soils. The seed is very hard and should be soaked wellin warm water until softened, before sowing, otherwise it may be in the ground a year before coming up. Ounce packages, two cents each. The tree should be tried in Owens valley, if suiten do the soil and climate, it would be of immense value.

THE WHITE MOUNTAINS.

A Trip for Pleasure, but Not Without Profit.

EDITOR INDEPENDENT:—Having made a trip recently to a little known region, some notes taken by the way may not be uninteresting.

The profit of the trip was in filling our game bags with grouse, quail and other game that abounds on these mountains. The pleasure was in looking upon one of the grandest panoramic views upon this continent, as seen from the highest peak of the range, overlooking the counties of Inyo and Mono, in California, and Esmeralda, in Nevada; any one of these counties being larger than some Eastern States. It is not necessary to go into a detailed description of the location of this peak; every resident of Owens Valley may see it every day; it is the high point just south of the White Ball mountain, and visible from all parts of the valley. Some pains were taken to ascertain the altitude of the peak; in the absence of accurate figures we estimate it to be 14,500 feet above sea level. Inquiry failed to discover if the mountain had ever been named; we therefore christened it "Inyo Observatory." On this grand summit the air is so pure that even small objects can be seen at a great distance; so great, indeed, that were it named the statement might well be doubted.

Spread out at all points of the compass, a thousand grand pictures, all in one, are seen, painted by the Master in all the lovely and varied colors of nature. Range after range, and gorge after gorge, the one gleaming in white, the other shrouded in gloom, give a peculiar wildness and sublimity to the scene. To the west lie the snow-covered Sierra peaks; cast stretches the Inyo range; southward is seen the broad expanse of Owens Lake, gleaming in the sunlight; the beautiful Owens Valley, gorgeous in its autumn dress,—

"Where Summer gathers up her robes of glory,
And like a dream of beauty glides away".—

Is seen through all its length; the lovely river, like a holy life, flowing smoothly on to its rest in the lake. The towns of Lone Pine, Independence, Big Pine and Bishop Creek, and all the beautiful homes and scenes in the valley are easily seen. Every large object in the more distant Round and Long valleys is plainly seen. The air is so pure that it acts like a lens to bring the whole vast scene into clear, distinct vision. Such scenes as these may well inspire the thought that the Great Creator when He willed them into being, designed as much to inspire adoration for His goodness, as awe of His power. As the suns sinks westward to the Pacific, a deeper calm, a more profound repose pervades the air; new beauties, other grandeur, are revealed by every gradation of the changing light, and the spectator is held for hours by the beauty of scenes that cannot be described. The spirit feels freed from "the muddy vesture of decay that doth grossly close it in," and fancies that it realizes that

"There's not the smallest orb which thou beholdst,
But in his motion like an angel sings,
Still quiring to the young-eyed cherubins."

About midway between Big Pine and Bishop Creek, the ranges of the Sierra appear like an enormous stairway, piled up by Titans. From the low foothills at the edge of the valley the steps ascend, one above another, range after range, till the crest is attained, and the peaks are seen covered with white, changeless, enduring as the granite itself. The vast range looks like a barrier, laid up by the Great Master Mason himself, to be an impassable barrier against all unworthy things that would attempt to invade the sanctity of the enclosed lovely valleys.

Once more will we glance down Owens valley, and ask, "What are those two shining threads, seen stretching from end to end of the valley?" They are threads of enterprise and progress, the rails of the Carson and Colorado railroad, that have opened up an avenue from this great valley to the Metropolis of the west, where waits a cash market for all the productions of these fertile lands, and all the minerals these mountains contain. When these mineral resources shall be fully developed, when the vacant lands shall be divided up and settled, when golden grain shall wave in the morning breeze, and

"Lowing herds wind slowly o'er the lea,"

As "comes gray evening on" round many a happy home—then will the view from this glorious summit afford even a greater pleasure than it now does, because it will reveal more of human comfort and happiness.

Yours, S. P. R.

HANGED LIKE WHITE MAN.—For some time past there has been trouble between the Piute and Washoe Indians. A meeting of the Piutes was recently held at Pyramid Lake to discuss the the subject. The Winnemucca Silver State of last Saturday says:

The Piutes say that three of their principal men advocated war and the annihilation of the Washoe tribe at their council, which is being held at Pyramid Lake Reservation, but Naches raised his voice for peace, and his views prevailed. He thinks the Washoes should be compelled to surrender the members of their tribe who murdered the Piute recently, and that these should be hanged, "all same white man punish murderers."

ON CRUTCHES.—J. V. Skinner of Lone Pine is now so far recovered from a hurt received nearly a month ago, that he is able to get around on crutches. Mr. Skinner was driving a heavy laden wagon, an axel broke, and while raising the wagon up with a Jack screw, the implement slipped and the wagon fell on one of Mr. Skinner's legs, bruising it terribly, but not breaking any bones, DONT WANT IT.—"I don't want that Blaine hat; circumstances over which I have no control compel me to crown Mr. Blair with a Cleveland hat instead.

The Salary Matter

At the meeting of the Board of Supervisors last Thursday, the matter of salaries of County officers was informally discused, and the Board had the following petition drawn up by the District Attorney, with intent to present a copy of the same to Hon. P. Beddy, State Senator from this district. and also to Mr. Van Voorhies, Assemblyman elect. As will be seen, the reduction proposed would make a saving to the county of $8,900, with an additinnal saving not specified on the salaries of Coroner and Administrator and the Beard of Supervisors. The reduction proposed will still leave fair salaries for the various offices, quite enough to secure the services of competent men, and that is all the county needs, and quite as much as tax payers should be burdened with.

THE PETITION.

To the Hon. P. Roddy, State Senator we the undersigned Supervisors and District Attorney of the county of Inyo respectfully that the salaries of county officers as fixed by an act of the Legislature of the State of California, Entitled "An act to Establish an Uniform system of County and Township Governments" approved March 14,1883are exorbitant and out of just proportion to the taxable property of said Inyo County.

That we think the following salaries are just and reasonable compensation for said officers, and respectfully ask that you endeavor to have said salaries reduced by the Legislature at its next Session.

That the salary of Sheriff fixed by the above entitled act at $5000, be fixed at the sum of $4000 per anum. That the salary of Tax Collector fixed by said act of the Legislature at $2000 be reduced, and fixed at the sum of $1000 per anumn. That the Salary of County Clerk fixed by said act of the Legislature at $3000 be reduced, and fixed at the sum of $1500 per annum. That the Salary of County Recorder fixed by said act of the Legislature at $2000 per annum be reduced and fixed at the sum of $800 per annum. That the Salary of Auditor fixed by said act of the Legislature at $1000 per annum be reduced and fixed at the sum of $200 per annum. That the Salary of the County Treasurer, fixed by said act of the Legislature at $1500 be reduced, and fixed at the sum of $1000 per annum. That the Salary of County Assessor, fixed by said act of the Legislature at $3500 per annum, be reduced and fixed at the sum of $1,200 per annum. That the Salary of District Attorney, fixed by said act of of the Legislature at $1500 be contained without change.

That the Salary of Superintendent of Schools, fixed by said act of the Legislature at one $1000 per annum, be reduced, and fixed at the sum of $400 per annum.

That the Coroner and Public Administrator shall receive no salary, but only such fees, as may be fixed by law,

We further represent that we believe it to be for the best interest of said Inyo county that the number of Supervisors be changed from five to three, and that said Supervisors be allowed per diem not to exceed the sum of six dollars for each day of actual service, and mileage from their respective residences to the Court House, not to exceed the sum of 30 cents per mile one way. Signed,

E. ROBINSON,
A. SPENCER, } Supervisors.
T. BOLAND,

J. W. P. LAIRD, District Attorney.

BUILDING UP THE COUNTRY.—The prosperity of Los Angeles is as much due to the public spirit of the people as to any advantages of soil or climate. The Express says: "The Immigration Association continues its good work in furnishing gratuitous information to all who take the trouble to write There is as much desire for reliable information at the East and in Canada now in regard to Southern California as ever, and at this time there is every indication that before winter fairly sets in, as great a tide of immigration will set this way, as at any time during the past two years. This Association has so far done its work without the sounding of trumpets, or making any very great amount of noise; but its work has told very pointedly in making it comparatively easy for excursion parties to Southern California to be organized; information has been supplied in advance. The Association has answered about 500 letters since its organization, four months ago. The Association is advertising in a number of papers in the Eastern States and Canada, and the tenor of the letters in response show a decided desire for reliable information. It should be understood and remembered by the public that this association is sustained entirely by voluntary contributions from Los Angeles merchants, manufacturers and others, a class of business men who are always foremost in promoting the public welfare. The few dollars expended in this way will return many fold in the increase of population and the consequent increase in the volume of trade." The people of Inyo would do well to profit by the example set them in Los Angeles.

BALL AT BISHOP STATION.—On the evening of Tnanksgiving day—Thursday of next week—a ball will be given at Bishop Station for the benefit of the school at that place. A reception committee, consisting of the following ladies: Mrs. Thede, Mrs. J. Man and Mrs. J. McNally, will give a hearty welcome to all comers. A free lunch will be served at the Hotel. Admission to the ball $1.50 for each lady and gentleman. The managers are Messrs. G. Thede, H. A. Man, and B. McGee.

SUPERVISORS' PROCEEDINGS.

Pursuant to adjornment the Board of Supervisors met last Monday. Mr. Spencer one of the members was absent. The matter of buying an official map of Inyo county was considered, and the following order was made: It is hereby ordered that the proposition of J. B. Treadwell to furnish 30 copies and the copy-right ot the map now on file in the office of the Clerk of the Board of Supervisors, for the sum of $750 be accepted, and the Auditor is hereby ordered to draw his warrent upon the General Expense Found in favor of said J. B. Treadwell upon his furnishing to the counts the said 30 copies and the copy-right of said map. And the said map now on file has this day been examined by the Board of Supervisors of said county, and by them declare to be correct, and the same is hereby approved, and declared to be the ficial map of Inyo county.

Personal Mention.

M. M. Glenn and family are in San Barnardino, San Barnardino county.

Mr. C. Anthony of Darwin has been in town all week as a witness in the Silva case.

Mr. Knapp, of the firm of Knapp and Laws, Hawthorn, Nevada, was in Independence this week.

W. Coplin, watchmaker lately established in Bishop Creek, says he is well pleased with his location, and is doing a good business.

Medbury and Miller have bought from Mr. E. Robinson, a large lot of stock hogs to be fatted on their place at Cottonwood.

Judge Arnot has become a great favorite in Independence. His courtesy, fairness and knowledge of law have won the esteem and confidence of the Bar; his skill as a minstrel makes him an equal favorite in society.

Most of the children in the famify of Mr. Schabbell at the Fort, have been very ill during the past week of a disease something like measels. The children have not yet recovered, and a physician is in constant attendance.

Henry Carlos Badger; the death of a person bearing this name was reported some months ago, but the facts have been lost sight of. Any one having knowledge of the death of said Badger will confer a favor by communicating with the office of the Inyo Independent.

Mr. Isaac Mairs arrived here ias Thursday morning from Montreal. Mr. Mairs is the father of Messrs O. I. Mairs, and J. Mairs, of Indopendence. Mr. Mairs might easily be taken for a man of fifty four years, though two score must be added to that figure to make his real age. He was about a week making the overland trip, and did not sppear to be more fatigued by the journey than a man of thirty would be. He is here on a visit a of a few weeks with his sons.

Eughley of Bishop Creek Deceased in company with his devoted wife left New York City in feeble health, and traveled to California by way of Denver City, seeking the restoration of that inestemable boon. Ariving at the residence of his sisters in Bishop Creek he found himself in the advanced stage of consumption and past all hope of recovery. His affliction though heart felt, and his suffering almost unendurable, were borne with manly fortitude and patient resignation, and were assuaged by the cheering presence and faithful ministration of a wife and sister whose cheering assurances and admonitions brightened the fading twilight of life that ushered in the dawn of immortal day, and shed a bright ray of hope over the path of the lone wanderer, through the "Valley of the shadow of death, over the dark river and up the "celestral hill" to the "Gate ajar" of the bright city of eternal joy. Though but a short time among us he made many warm friends who join in mourning his early departure to that home from whence no traveler returns, "where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest. ***

LEGEND OF STAR ISLAND.

The Only Monument to John Smith, Friend of Pocahontas.

During the troublesome times before and subsequent to the revolution the isles of Shoals, off the coast of New Hampshire, were the resort and hiding places of the freebooters who haunted the northern coast, and these silent rocks, if they could speak, would tell many a tale of bloody cruelty and gloomy wrong. The pirates used to come here to divide and hide their booty, and melt up the silverplate they captured from the colonists along the coast.

For a long time it was supposed that bushels of doubloons was buried in the gaping crevices of the rocks, or the little caves that have been eaten out of the ledges by the restless tide; but the place was thoroughly searched by several generations of fishermen, and nothing more valuable than a rusty cutlass or a bursted blunderbuss was ever found.

The grandames tell how Capt. Kydd came here often "as he sailed," and there are legends of other pirates quite as fierce and free as he. The Star Island used to be haunted by a beautiful specter with long white robes and golden tresses reaching to her heels, who used to come out of some undiscovered cavern at dawn, and shading her eyes with a hand that was as white and beautiful as a lily's bosom, gaze off upon the sea in hopeless expectancy of the return of a clipper that sailed away and never came back again.

The story goes that a bloody-hearted old pirate, being pursued by a cruiser, brought his beautiful mistress here and left her while he went out to battle, telling her that by dawn he would be back again, but he came not, not even till now. She died of starvation, but her faithful spirit comes to the summit of the island as the sun rises each morning, to meet the corsair who never returned.

There are eight of the islands, the smallest of which being as large, or, rather, as small, as a city building lot, and the largest containing only a couple of hundred acres—nothing but bare lifeless rocks, carved by the incessant waves into strange grotesqueness, and covered by no vegetation except low clinging vines and the New England blueberry. Four of the islands are inhabited, the largest, the Appledore, bears a hotel and a few cottages. Star Island has another hotel and a small settlement of fishermen. A third has a few fishermen's huts, and the fourth has a bold white lighthouse springing out of its crest. They were discovered by Capt. John Smith, the friend of Pocahontas, who in 1614 explored the New England coast in an open boat, and spent some time here making repairs and resting.

On Star Island stands the only monument erected in America to Capt. John Smith. It is a rude affair, a prismatic-shaped shaft of marble upon a pedestal of sandstone, inscribed at lengtg with the record of his valorous deeds, and some cyclopedias say he is buried here, but that is a mistake.

A Headdress of Sponge.

Did I not tell you some time ago, when I was writing up mushroom in satin, that if you waited long enough I would find something lower still than that vegetable to decorate your heads with? and lo! the useful sponge turns up just in the nick of time, as a fashion caprice, when the world seemed to have yielded up its last-to-be-thought-of ornament in the shape of fungi.

It's quite funny, as Lou Harrison would say, "very, very funny," this idea of wearing on your head the same thing with which you wash your head; but still the sponge as a novelty is immense—would be more immense should the wearer of the same be caught in a shower.

As it is, the sponge is cut flat, and decorated with loops of gold thread stuck into the holes, as it would be, it would swell up under that shower, making the head appear as a cabbage, the golden loops retiring as animalculi within their soft cases. Oh! I would give—well, all I have in my purse—a new nickel, to see the courageous woman who would go out in a rain storm with a sponge on the top of her pate. Nevertheless, being la mode, you can make up a sponge chapeau awfully cheap. Par example, I see old men carrying baskets full of the coarse kind along the street. These are perfectly worthless as washers, but for capotes—oh, my! Think of it! You can beat down the man who asks ten cents apiece, into giving you two for fifteen cents; four bits' worth of gold thread, judiciously glued in loops into each hole; a yard or two of mock lace, touched up with a little gold bronze, and you have a bonnet fit for any one. Even Langtry might be proud of the latest novelty.

First Editor of the Evening Post.

The evening before we started, Mr. Coleman, the editor of the Evening Post, dropped in to chat an hour or two in his usual friendly way; but at length, pulling out his watch, rose in haste, saying he had an appointment to which he must attend. I asked him if he would not call on us in the morning before we left.

"Why," he replied pleasantly, "I don't really know, my good friend. I should like to."

"Well," said I, "we shall not go very early, and if you are awake—"

"Oh," he interrupted in the same peculiar tone, "depend on it, if I'm awake I'll drop in to see you."

In the morning we saw no Mr. Coleman; but a week after I was informed that he had fought a duel with some gentleman of New York on the very day in question, and that he had in fact sat in my parlor and conversed with us till within half an hour of the appointed time, which pleasantly enough accounted for the ambiguity of his parting expression.—The Manhattan.

Hongkong.

In itself of course the island has no natural advantages, hardly, even, one might say, in point of position, but as subsidiary to the intercourse between the British and Chinese Empires, it has exceeded the most sanguine expectations. Official statistics show that the tonnage of the shipping entered at the port of Hongkong in the year 1883 exceeded 5,000,000 tons. As a mere matter of figures this is eminently gratifying, but when we institute comparisons and find that this is a larger amount of shipping than was entered at the port of London in 1843, the year in which Hongkong was annexed to the British Crown, it is not too much to say that the growth is startling. The financial position is not less satisfactory. The public revenue of the year 1883 amounted to $1,286,500, say £234,000, exceeding by little short of £100,000 the revenue of the entire kingdom of Scotland at the time of the Union. Besides defraying the expenses of public works, police, port, shipping, light-house and other matters, the colony annually contributes £20,000 to the Imperial funds. With all this it has been the regular boast of Hongkong that it is the only State or colony of importance which at the present day is not only without a public debt, but which possesses invested assets nearly equal to its annual revenue. However ungracious it may seem, one cannot help recollecting that Cochin-China, which has now been over twenty years in French hands, is still an annual burden to the home Government, notwithstanding the fertility of the country, and the huge interior to which Saigon serves as a port. Haiphong has been practically French for ten years. It was a dirty little village when the Anamese Government agreed to the establishment of a French concession with a garrison of 200 troops. It still remains a dirty little village, but the French have built some very neat houses for the officials, and the public offices are charming. But there is no trade to speak of. There is a French mercantile house, but its establishment in Haiphong implies the disappearance of the only national firm in Saigon. This was hard on Cochin-China, if it was gratifying to Tonquit. One cannot help recollecting, when such comparisons are made, that the fifth of Shameen Island in the Canton river, which belongs to France, has never been built upon.—London Times Correspondence.

Deceitful Builders.

There is, seemingly, no business carried on in the world where there is more fraud and dishonesty than in the building trades. All builders and contractors are not dishonest, but the number who are is legion. The chief aim of many of them seems to be to ascertain some plan for ringing in a bill for extras, or for evading the true intent of the contract by furnishing a different and poorer material than that stipulated in the specifications. It is a very difficult thing for a "green hand" at building to make a contract with a builder which will hold water. There is such a chance for ambiguity and omissions. Then, half of the parties do not know what is necessary to be done to insure a good building, and the honest carpenter is the last man to inform them. Go into court, and there will be seen case after case arising out of the attempt of some smart builder to palm off sham in the place of good work. There seems to be no way of avoiding this trouble unless one goes to a skilled and honest architect and places the matter wholly in his charge. Even then disputes and litigations frequently arise.

There is room for a radical reformation in the building trades. The cause of much of the dishonesty in these trades arises from the unscrupulous competition which there prevails. Bidders offer to take jobs at a loss, hoping to make up by scrimping and by obtaining payment for a liberal amount of "extras." It is difficult to point out a remedy for this evil. If one can find a builder who is known to be honest, it would be better to patronize him, even if his bid is a trifle higher than that of his competitors. Underbidding is the bane of the building trades. Cheap contracts usually mean cheap and deceitful work, and unsatisfactory results all around. It is pretty safe to say that no builder calculates to lose money on a job, and many of the gentlemen of the craft will get out from under a too low bid by means which will not bear the light of day.

All contractors for erecting buildings, as we have said, are not thus dishonest. Some, even, will go on to the end and faithfully perform their engagements when they know they will lose by so doing. Such men should be rewarded by good patronage, but, unfortunately, they do not always grow rich. The doctrine of the "survival of the fittest," we are sorry to say, does not always prove true in their case.—Industrial World.

Mushrooms Raised in Sheds All the Year.

It is now stated that it is not necessary to raise mushrooms in a cellar, in total darkness, but that they can be equally well raised in sheds. These are covered with manure, in an ordinary "lean to," with beds twenty yards in length, and four yards in width. Doors are open at each end, and the draught is said to be good for the mushrooms. The spawn is put in about the size of a pigeon egg, about nine inches apart, covered three inches deep, and produces mushrooms in six weeks from the planting of the spawn. In this case the beds bear faster and longer than a dark cellar, and a succession is produced for a considerable period much more so than the cellars heretofore in use. The Eastern papers say that this new way of raising mushrooms for family use and sale in cities and towns has almost superseded the dark cellar system, as it is much better. How it would make money for Southern Californians who only have mushrooms during the wet season, and then, in competition with the restaurants and hotels, have to pay a good price for them, or else buy champignons in tin cans. Many people have just the right place for the raising of this delicious edible fungi, and as they can be raised all the year around, it would be a cheap and paying investment to engage in their cultivation.—Los Angeles Herald.

The Courier tells the story of a little Boston girl who called one of her dolls—a jointless creature—her "woman's rights doll." "But why do you call her so?" asked her aunt, a lecturer upon that much-discussed question. "Oh! 'cause, Aunt X," the child answered, "she's just like you; she can't ever sit down and be comfortable."

THE BALLAD OF THE BABY.

Bald of head and red in the face,
I'm only a baby weak and small;
A bundle of flannel and bib and lace;
But don't, I beg, into error fall,
For there's not a thing on this earthly ball,
Or big or little, or old or new
That holds the world in complete thrall;
Come, list to the deeds I can do.

I can shriek a shriek to rend at once,
Can choke myself with my bordered shawl,
Can send my nurse on a frantic chase
For pins that never were there at all,
I can make my pa, so brave and tall,
Say curious words, just one or two,
As he walks the floor to hush my squall;
Come, list to the deeds that I can do.

I can coo and coo with tender grace,
And bring my subjects at beck and call,
With cunning smile and a soft embrace,
While into mischief I straightway crawl;
My mamma's anger I can forestall,
I can patty-cake and can peek-a-boo,
I can charm, enslave, delude, appall;
Come, list to the deeds that I can do.

ENVOY.

With my tiny hands I can build life's wall
As true and strong as the skies are blue;
I am monarch of hut and hall;
Come, list to the deeds that I can do.

A Queer Little Fellow.

Isn't it a queer little fellow who knows everything as soon as he's born, and builds a house for himself before he's one day old?

Everything about him is curious. To begin with, he lives at the bottom of a pond or river. At first he was nothing but a tiny atom of a green egg, stuck to the stem of some weeds under the water. After a while the egg burst open, out crawled Mr. Worm, and proceeded at once to look for building materials.

You see, except his head and neck, which are protected by a hard covering, he is a soft little worm, and he wouldn't live long in the same pond with fish and bugs and spiders, who have nothing to do but eat, and are always hungry, unless he had a safe home. So of course he goes the first thing to building. He hunts up the dead leaves and glues them together in such a way as to leave a nice cozy house between them. It's perfectly safe, for who would suspect an old dead leaf of being anybody's house?

No sooner is the house done than Mr. Worm moves in. He doesn't have to wait for painters and furniture men—happy fellow! He just goes in and fastens himself there by means of a pair of hooks he has at the end of his tail, and then he's ready to live. The next thing is something to eat. So he starts off, taking his house with him, to hunt up some bits of green stuff, or some atom of a worm smaller than he is.

But strange things happen to this bit of a worm at the bottom of the pond. His life is full of wonderful adventures. If he were bigger he would be the wonder of the world.

After eating as much as he can, Mr. Worm thinks it is time to retire from the gay world; so he finishes his house by hanging before it a silk door—no loose curtain, but a tightly woven net-work, which he spins and fastens carefully on every side.

Whether he goes to sleep in his comical little home, or what he does, nobody knows, because nobody can peep in, you know. But something goes on there in the dark; for after a while the little prisoner opens the door, comes out of his house, crawls up the stem of some weeds till he is out of the water, and then—you'd never guess what happens!

Why, his old skin splits open, and he pulls himself out—no longer a miserable little worm, but a gorgeous four-winged Caddice fly, dressed in a neat suit of brown. And he cares no more for the bottom of the pond and his old straw house. He sails off on the air a gay, dancing fly.—Little Folks.

A Lonesome Horse.

A Leominster farmer recently broke his horse of a "balky" freak in a very quiet, and, as he claimed, not a cruel manner. His horse is in excellent flesh, and shows no sign of neglect on the part of his master. He drove him, attached to a rack wagon, to the wood lot for a small load of wood. The animal would not pull a pound. He did not beat him with a club, but tied him to a tree and let him stand. He went to the lot at sun-set and asked him to draw, but he would not straighten a hair. "I made up my mind," said the farmer, "when that horse went to the barn he should take that load of wood. The night was not cold. I went to the barn, got blankets and covered the horse warm, and he stood still till morning. Then he refused to draw. At noon I went down, and he was probably hungry and lonesome. He drew that load of wood the first time I asked him. I returned and got another load before I fed him. I then rewarded him with a good dinner, which he eagerly devoured. I have drawn several loads since. Once he refused to draw, but as soon as he saw me start for the house he started after me with the load. A horse becomes lonesome and discontented when left alone, as much as a person, and I claim this method, if rightly used, is far less cruel and is better for both horse and man than to beat the animal with a club."—Fitchburg Sentinel.

A Bradford man named Swilger, who had been a hopeless invalid for ten years, was cured by faith and prayer week before last. The second day after his recovery he celebrated the event with some friends in a saloon, and had to be carried home on a blind.

"Ever had a cyclone here?" asked a Kansas man who was visiting a country aunt in the east. "A cyclone? oh, yes," said his aunt. "Deacon Brown's son brought one from Boston a spell ago, but law! he couldn't ride a mile with it, it blew off every time he tried.

That Dining-Room Floor.

That dining-room floor! How it did trouble little Mrs. Redmond! She sighed over it, and almost wept over it sometimes, and a tiny wrinkle was beginning to find a place in her round face, such trouble was she in.

You see the trouble was this: When she cleaned house in the spring she had, very reluctantly, I must admit, taken up the dining-room carpet for the last time. It had been a good, serviceable carpet in its day, but even the best of carpets will wear out, and this one had done its duty well for so many years that it really was worn out beyond all hope of repair. It had been turned and re-turned, cleaned, beaten, darned, patched, in fact, everything that Mrs. Redmond's fertile brain could suggest, or her nimble fingers execute, and at last sentence of banishment had been pronounced upon it. The utmost usefulness that could be expected of it hereafter was an occasional rug, which might be taken from the best parts of it.

It was not the taking up of this carpet that worried Mrs. Redmond so, but it was the fact that she couldn't put another one down. She had saved and scrimped in every possible way all winter; she had worn her last year's cloak and bonnet without a murmur, that she might have money enough in the spring to get the pretty ingrain carpet she had set her heart upon; but just when she had saved almost money enough, John's brother was taken ill, and all the money that the Redmonds could possibly spare went to help them through the expenses of his long illness. Not that Mrs. Redmond grudged a single cent of it—like the brave little woman she was, she joked cheerfully with John over the comfort and beauty of the bare floor, and did not let her liege lord suspect that it was a grief to her. She was so fond of pretty things, and did so dearly love to have everything at home as dainty and neat as possible, that it was a real trouble to her to have this bare floor continually before her. It could not even be scrubbed white, for the boards, although smooth and evenly laid, were old and stained. What could be done with it? Mrs Redmond set her wits to work and thought of one plan after another, but, alas! they were all shattered by a peep into her pocket-book. A dainty pattern of matting would be so cool for the summer, and cheap, too, a most important desideratum; but even that could not be thought of. Suddenly a bright thought flashed upon Mrs. Redmond, and she fairly gasped with delight. A remembrance of a beautiful tiled floor she had seen somewhere, came to her as she sat thinking about this dining-room floor and although tiles were as far beyond her reach as a Wilton carpet, yet the memory of that floor suggested a very valuable idea about this one.

"I will do it! It will be perfectly lovely!" exclaimed Mrs. Redmond, in a burst of enthusiastic delight, and all her trouble vanished like snow before the sun.

She put on her bonnet and went down town on a shopping expedition, the result of which was seen when she came home laden with paint-pots and brushes.

"Now, John shan't know a word about it until it is done," she said to herself, as she rolled her sleeves up over her dimpled arms and set to work. The boards in the floor were about four inches wide, and she painted them alternately, a rich, warm brown and dark red. It was not a very large room, but it took her nearly all day to complete it. As she stepped back over the threshold to survey her work, she was well pleased with its appearance.

"It is just about as pretty as an inlaid floor," she said to herself. "Now, when I give it another coat of paint and varnish it, I shall be perfectly satisfied with it."

When John came home in the evening he found supper waiting in the kitchen for him, and when he essayed to go into the dining-room he found the door securely locked.

"It's a surprise," said Mrs. John, mysteriously.

"Not a carpet, surely!" exclaimed John, in astonishment.

"Something better than a carpet," answered Mrs. Redmond. "But you must be patient for a couple of days, and then you shall see."

Two days later Mrs. John was watching for her liege lord with impatience that she could scarcely suppress. She divided her time between the gate and the dining-room door. Such a pretty sight as met her eyes as she stood in the latter that I don't wonder it was very attractive to her. That dining-room floor was still bare, but how changed! No carpet could be prettier than those stripes of red and brown, and a wide, brown border around the edge gave such a finish to it. Cheese cloth curtains were looped back from the windows with dainty, blue ribbons, and the tea table stood in the middle of the room. No wonder Mrs. John was a proud little woman. When John came he was just as astonished and delighted as she had hoped he would be, and admired her floor to her heart's content.

"'Necessity is the mother of invention' you know, she quoted, laughingly. "If I had lots of money I shouldn't have thought of this."

Years after this, when Mrs John was comparatively rich and had a real inlaid floor, she often looked back to her painted dining-room floor and remembered, half wistfully, how she had enjoyed every inch of it. Not all the rich carpets and tiles gave her quite as much pleasure as did that dining-room floor.—Minnie E. Kenney, in N. Y. Witness.

An English inventor proposes to use glass instead of wood and iron in the construction of bridges. The glass is in blocks and is hardened by a special process. The bridges, it is claimed, will cost less and be more durable, not being injured by rust or insects.

S. W. Tallmadge, the crop statistician of Milwaukee, issued his final estimate of the wheat crop of the United States for 1884 as follows: Winter wheat, 380,000,000 bushels; 150,000,000, or 130,000,000 bushels more than the crop of 1883.

Battlefield Humor.

Many humorous incidents occurred on battlefields. A confederate colonel ran ahead of his regiment at Malvern Hill, and discovering that the men were not following him as closely as he wished, he uttered a fierce oath, and exclaimed:

"Come on! Do you want to live forever?"

The appeal was irristible, and many a poor fellow who had laughed at the colonel's queer exhortation laid down his life soon after.

A shell struck the wheel of a federal field-piece toward the close of the engagement at Fair Oaks, and, shivering the spokes, dismantled the cannon.

"Well, isn't it lucky that it didn't happen before we used up all our ammunition," remarked one of the artillerists, as he crawled from beneath the gun.

When General Pope was falling back before Lee's advance in the Virginia valley, his own soldiers thought his bulletins and orders somewhat strained in their rhetoric. At one of the numerous running engagements that marked that disastrous campaign, a private in one of the western regiments was mortally wounded by a shell. Seeing the man's condition, a chaplain knelt beside him, and opening his Bible at random, read out Samson's slaughter of the Philistines with the jaw-bone of an ass. He had not quite finished when, as the story runs, the poor fellow interrupted the reading by saying:

"Hold on, chaplain. Don't deceive a dying man. Isn't the name of John Pope signed to that?"

A column of troops was pushing forward over the long and winding road in Thoroughfare Gap to head off Lee after his retreat across the Potomac at the close of the Gettysburg campaign. Suddenly the signal officer who accompanied the general in command discovered that some of his men, posted on a high hill in the rear, were reporting the presence of a considerable body of confederate troops on the top of the bluffs on the right. A halt was at once sounded, and the leading brigade ordered forward to uncover the enemy's position. The regiments were soon scrambling up the steep incline, officers and men gallantly racing to see who could reach the crest first. A young lieutenant and some half dozen men gained the advance, but at the end of what they deemed a perilous climb, they were thrown into convulsions of laughter at discovering that what the signal men took for confederate troops were only a tolerably large flock of sheep. As the leaders in this forlorn hope rolled on the grass in a paroxysm of merriment, they laughed all the louder at seeing the pale but determined faces of their comrades, who, of course, came up fully expecting a desperate hand-to-hand struggle.

It is perhaps needless to say the brigade supped on mutton that evening.

As the army was crossing South mountain the day before the battle of Antietam, General McClellan rode along the side of the moving column. Overtaking a favorite zouave regiment, he exclaimed with his natural bonhomie:

"Well, and how is the Old Fifth this evening?"

"First-rate, general," replied one of the zouaves. "But we'd be better off if we weren't living so much on supposition."

"Supposition?" said the general, in a puzzled tone. "What do you mean by that?"

"It's easily explained, sir. You see we expected to get our rations yesterday, but as we didn't, we're living on the supposition that we did."

"Ah, I understand; you shall have your rations, zou-zous, to-night," replied the general, putting spurs to his horse to escape the cheers of his regiment. And he kept his promise.

Arabian Politeness.

There was a poor Arab once, who, traveling in the desert, and accustomed only to water from muddied and brackish wells, came upon a spring of the purest and sweetest water. So fresh and pure did the water seem to him that he thought it a not unworthy present to the caliph of his tribe. And so, filling his water-skin to the full with it, he started on a long and difficult journey to his caliph's presence. At last, he laid his offering of the sweet water at his monarch's feet. The caliph did not despise the poor man's offering, ordered some of it poured into a cup, drank it, and presented the humble giver with a suitable reward. The courtiers, crowding around, were making haste themselves to taste the wonderful water; but the caliph immediately forbade them—not a drop of it might they touch. When, at last, the humble man had gone, the courtiers ventured to ask the reason of a command so strange. Then the caliph answered: "During the travels of the Arab, the water in his leathern bottle had become impure and distasteful; but it was an offering of love, and as such I received it with pleasure. But I well knew that, had I allowed another to partake of it, he would not have concealed his disgust; and, therefore, I forbade you to touch the water, lest the heart of the poor man should have been wounded."—Selected.

Little Willie was fond of throwing stones at the passing school boys, and then taking refuge behind the hall door. One day he did not get away so easily, and, faring pretty badly, he burst into his aunt's presence with the tears running down his cheeks, and sobbed out in great wrath, "I just wish I was an angel 'way up high, where the policeman couldn't catch me, with my pocket full of rocks, if I wouldn't give it to them boys!"

A Plea for the Inebriate.

The destruction or temporary dethronement of human reason presents no more melancholy subject for reflection, nor a sadder sight to look upon than that which the hopeless inebriate gives us, or he who has given himself up as hopeless. While the insane man is unconscious of his condition, the inebriate is not so, and often, indeed, is keenly alive to the reality of his deplorable condition. Stung, perhaps, with remorse on account of the course he has taken, and harassed with fears of losing all self-control, or the consciousness of having lost it, he drowns the acuteness of his mental suffering again and again with the death-dealing poison, which, like the grip of an anaconda, is continually tightening its hold until it has caused the poor victim to perish.

Some leading minds in medical science have regarded dipsomania or the thirst of drunkards a disease of body and mind, and advocated the necessity of treating it as such. Few seem to realize the fact, and the poor slave of the bottle (whose mind and body are suffering from chronic alcoholism) is treated more with contempt by the majority of the strictly temperate than anything else. He is, in most instances, an outcast, considered unworthy the companionship of good people, and not looked upon with that sympathy, nor provided for with that care which the man with a different disease is.

There are hospitals for the sick suffering from almost every disease; hospitals for special diseases, for the maimed, crippled, and deformed; asylums for the diseased in mind, the deaf, the blind, etc. In fact, provision has been made by our philanthropic civilization for the special care and prolonged existence of almost every kind of unfortunate being. But the drunkard, the poor victim of dipsomania, a disease as curable probably as many others, is thrust aside as a culpable nuisance, and dies—it may be a premature and ignominious death.

Some of the new philosophy of the age questions whether there is real charity or philanthropy in nurturing constitutional weakness and helpless deformities, especially in their care and maintenance at the expense of the public, the so-called charitable institutions. It maintains that the sooner society eliminates these incumbrances by allowing them to drop out of existence the better for the progress of the race, the more healthy and perfect will be each succeeding generation.

The rigid and seemingly heartless rule of a Lycurgus might be a good thing for this physically degenerating age, but it would hardly be in accord with the institutions and teachings of more modern civilized nations. And yet this is practically the course which society allows to the drunkard. Push him into the gutter. Let him die there, or return to it as often as he chooses, or, rather, is forced to do; for he has lost his self-control. But humanity asks whether his life is more worthless than that constitutionally diseased person's who is doctored and cared for by the public expense, and so prolonging his existence until he transmits to posterity an inheritance of his disease or imbecility.

If it is not, then why not have an asylum for the drunkard, such as are usually considered and treated as hopeless? Why not treat his disease at the public expense if necessary, and thus show towards him charitable feelings? Until "prohibition laws," or, better still, the Biblical injunction of "temperance in all things," shall rule, should there not be at least one asylum in every State, or, if need be, in every county, where drunkards should be treated? If not cured sufficiently to quit the habit and make themselves useful to society, they could be made to help in keeping up such an institution.

The Social Status in Norway.

To the effeminate epicure, whose first inquiry concerning any suggested excursion refers to the hotel accommodations, Norway is still an inaccessible country, and all who know and enjoy it are unanimous in hoping that it may ever remain so, as it probably will; for, excepting at Christiana, Trondhjem, Bergen, and two or three more cities, there are no hotels at all as understood by tourists who are dependent on waiter, chamber-maid, and boots. The cringing host, the bowing waiter, and the dodging polyglot valet de place are unknown, and their absence is deliciously refreshing to all who are strong enough to breathe the bracing moral atmosphere resulting from the social condition of a country that has never been subject to feudal institutions, and the inhabitants of which are curiously ignorant of the meaning of "social status; where servants shake hands with their masters and masters bow to their servants. An amusing illustration of this occurred during my last trip on the Arctic boat: an English gentleman in the tea business—wholesale, of course—took me into his confidence and complained of the extreme familiarity of "these people," the steward having shaken hands with him as he entered the saloon in the morning. He was very indignant when I suggested the possibility of the steward regarding the passengers as his guests and himself as their equal or thereabout. Among our fellow passengers was the Duke of Roxburgh, spending his seventeenth summer in Arctic Norway. When the Duke was leaving our vessel to transship on the little Lofoden omnibus packet, I directed the attention of the tea merchant to his proceedings. All the crew who were old friends, shook hands with him, the engineer and stoker coming on deck and wiping their fingers on cotton waste as a preliminary to the hearty farewell greeting. The tea dealer was speechless.—Belgravia.

They Only Drink It.

"So you've been to Saratoga, Mrs. Green." "Yes; and it's a regular swindle. Everybody praised the water there as being very beneficial, and I went to work and had made for me a regular bathing suit. And, if you'll believe me, there was no chance of showing it after I got there. The people don't bathe in the water; they only drink it.

TURKISH RULE.

Fiendish Mode of Torturing Fellow-Beings.

His excellency, Osman Bey, is seated on the divan of a large room of cold and sinister aspect, the floor covered with large slabs and lighted by high windows looking on the street. His face, of a light olive tint, is adorned with a scanty black beard and whiskers; the nose is strong, the lips are thick, the eyes dark and deep. Though rather stout, he is well formed and above middle height. When Osman Bey smiles his countenance becomes pleasing and amiable, but when the smile is absent his regard is cold and stern. Near him, before a little table covered with green baize, sits his secretary. A negro, clad in a long white robe, and wearing on his head an enormous yellow turban, brings me a little cup of coffee and a bundle of cigarettes. As I hand back my cup to this imposing servitor, three Arabs, escorted by two guards, are led before the prefect. These unfortunates seem to belong to the poorest of the people; their feet are bare, their clothing is worn and ragged, their hands tremble convulsively, their eyes are haggard, and their faces twitch in apprehension as they listen in mournful silence to the words addressed to them by the prefect. But they answer his questions with feverish vivacity, and after the exchange of a few words two of the prisoners are led from the room.

Then five men entered. These are the torturers, and nothing more fell or hang-dog than their looks can be imagined. Four of them seized the Arab who is still standing before the prefect, and the poor wretch, as he is cast on the ground, throws at him a glance eloquent with agony and fear, but the great man's countenance remains fixed and impassive, and he makes no sign of grace. The victim was then placed on one of the slabs with his chin resting on the stone, in which position he was held by two of the executioners. Two others next raised his legs until his feet were in a horizontal position, in which they were retained by means of a cord fastened to either end of a stick. Each man held the stick with one hand while with the other he kept fast hold of the Arab's legs. In the grip of these four powerful and expert men it was impossible for him to move, and almost impossible for him to writhe. On this the fifth torturer, who had taken no part in the preliminary proceedings, came forward, holding in his hand a sort of lash, consisting of five strands of twisted gut or hide. The face of the man was singularly hideous and repulsive—the yellow and tawny skin, the low forehead, the round eyes, dull and fixed, the thick black eyebrows, the unbearded chin retreating from course, thick lips, the creased and furrowed cheeks imparted to the countenance of the chief executioner an air of ferocious and bestial stupidity.

The tormentor raised his arm and struck with the regularity of a pendulum the upturned feet of his helpless victim. At the forth stroke the Arab uttered a cry of pain, and at every fresh stroke the cry was repeated. But soon the cry became a scream, the flagellated flesh visibly shuddered and the soles were seamed with red and livid streaks. Sitting silently on my cushion, chewing mechanically the tobacco of my extinguished cigarette, I could not help shivering with horror at the sight of so much suffering. I felt as if I were under the influence of some terrible nightmare. Osman Bey, his secretary, the five executioners, with their stern and sinister features, looking unmoved on so cruel a sight, seemed for a moment rather the creations of a disordered imagination than beings of flesh and blood.

The Curse of Guiteau.

Washington special Chicago Tribune: The murder of Police Officer Fowler by a negro rough in the chain-gang has reminded some superstitious people of the curse of Guiteau. Police Officer Fowler was one of the three mounted men who guarded the assassin's van in its trips from the jail to the court house throughout the trial. Guiteau, the night the verdict was brought in, in the dark courtroom dimly lighted by candles, glaring like a wild beast, invoked a curse upon all who had been connected with the trial. There have been a number of deaths of persons so connected, including in their number jurors, doctors, detectives, jailers, policemen and attorneys. Within two weeks two covered by Guiteau's curse have died—Dr. Wood, of the army, one of Garfield's surgeons, and now Officer Fowler.

The Old Saw Too Much for Him.

He was a tramp, and when he had carefully scanned the back yard for the expected wood pile, and had found none, he quietly slid around, knocked at the front door, and began his story of misfortune and his inability to get work. "Yes," said the farmer, who was of a classic turn, "but 'labor conquers all things'; you remember the old saw, don't you?" "Yes, indeed I do," said the wayfarer, as tears started to his eyes, "and the remembrance is indeed painful, but as I came along I didn't see any hanging up on the back of the house, so I thought I would ask you for something to eat. Yes, I remember the old saw and the wood pile, too, but have no use for them. Good day," and he vanished into the wherefore of the whither.

THE festive high-binders of the See Yup and Sam Yip companies had a picnic in Chinatown last week. One Celestial was found dead by the officers, and several wounded. It is a pity they cannot work the battle of the Kilkenny cats down to a finer point.

AN effort will be made at the coming session of Congress to pass the bill introduced by Cullom last Winter to correct deficiencies in the Edmunds bill for the suppression of polygamy in Utah. Should the promoters of the scheme be successful, the country will probably see the settlement, at last, of the long-vexed Mormon question.

A NEW periodical has been started in Stockton; it is called The Interior, and the purpose is to call attention to the undeveloped resources of the region of which Stockton is the center. The great benefit to all concerned that has followed extensive advertising of undeveloped resources in more southern counties is causing similar efforts to be made in other parts of the State. The Interior is a very handsome paper, and will bring large increase of population and wealth to its section.

THE full authentic returns show that the Republican majority on joint ballot is forty. The majority in the Senate is two; in the Assembly thirty-eight. The Senate consists of forty members and the Assembly of eighty. The former body is composed of twenty-one Republicans and nineteen Democrats; the latter of fifty-nine Republicans and twenty-one Democrats. Some of the leading papers are lamenting the fact of there being so few lawers elected to that body as several constitutional questions will probablo arise at the next session.

THE Supreme Court of Iowa recently rendered a decision which will be of interest to women who contemplate marrying drinking men with a view to reforming them. A wife had made application for a divorce on the ground that her husband was a confirmed drunkard. The evidence showed that she had a knowledge of his intemperate habits when she married him, and the Judge refused the petition with these words: "You voluntarily chose a drunkard for a husband, and you should discharge the duties of a drunkard's wife. His failure to keep a pledge of reformation made before marriage does not justify you in deserting him. Having knowingly married a drunkard, you must make yourself content with the sacred relationship."

HAD Spreckels not seen repeated instances where money secured escape from punishment for crime, he would not have attempted to murder the proprietor of the Chronicle. The only sure protection for all citizens is a prompt and impartial execution of laws for the prevention of crime. Since Lord Ferrers was hanged in England, in the last century, for the murder of his servant, just as any obscure criminal would have been hanged for a like crime, there has not been another instance of murder by a titled ruffian in that country. If Mr. De Young dies, his death will be caused by murder, and money should not be permitted to shield his murderer faom deserved death by hanging. If the wounded man recovers, the assassin should have the full penalty fixed by law for an attempt to commit murder.

ANOTHER Thanksgiving Day has come and gone, and throughout the land the customary rites and ceremonies have been gone through with. In the larger cities eloquent addresses have been delivered by the leading divines; addresses exhibiting deep thought and careful preparation—more, perhaps, than real heartfelt thanks to the Deity for the many blessings we are taught come from him. The country parsons have endeavored to impress upon their hearers the munificence of the great Giver of all. Some have listened with great piety, others with indifference. Some have celebrated the day without knowing why or how the custom originated; but all look upon it as a day when they shall meet in social concourse. It is one of the occasions in the year when the people meet and interchange ideas. It is one of the ties that binds society together. The nation has just passed through a great struggle; a great deal of ill feeling has existed on both sides; but on thanksgiving day they meet to praise the same God and they realize the fact that they are one mighty nation and not two divisions of one country each striving for the mastery. There is no closer bond of sympathy than to worship together. While the people's hearts are filled with gratitude toward the Diety for his many and continued blessings they are also filled with kindness toward each other, and this union of hearts makes them forget all party strifes and resolve to become one great and mighty whole.

IT seems that the New York authorities have determined to break up prize fighting in that city. Bench warrants have been served on Richard K. Fox, proprietor of the Police Gazette, William E. Harding, sporting editor, and Charley Jonhson, proprietor of a Brooklyn sporting house, they having been indicted for aiding and abetting the Sullivan-Greenfield boxing match. They gave bail. Warrants are out for other sporting men.

ON THE first Wednesday in December the Presidental Electors will meet at the Capitals of their respective States to cast their ballot for President and Vice President. Should they fail to do so in any State the vote of that State may be thrown out by Congress. Georgia once lost her vote in this way. There are three certificates made of the vote. One of these is sent to the President of the Senate by a special messenger, another through the mail and the third is deposited with the judge of the District in which they meet Should one of these fail to reach its destination by the first Wednesday in January a messenger is sent for the one left with the District Judge. The votes tranamitted as above are opened by the President of the Senate in the presence of both houses of Congress on the second Wednesday of February and the result declared.

A MEETING of the Carnival Association was held Thursday at the room of the Mechanics Institute, G. Hughes in the chair and Mrs. Clayton Secretary. The programme of the week was decided upon. On Monday, the opening night, there is to be the representation of Midsummer Night's Dream. Thursday, over 100 children belonging to the Turn Verein will give a calisthenic exhibition, with a military drill by two companies under the command of Colonel Smedberg. Wednesday, a Toby Rosenthal representation, and if the picture "Elaine" is given, the original will be the pose. Thursday, a well known violin teacher with twenty five of his pupils, will give the "Carnaval de Venise." There will also be military tableaux, including a representation of the "Spirit of 1776." On Friday the children's fancy dress ball will take place, and on Saturday the Olympic Club will give an exhibition, and for the benefit of the excursionists the Midsummer Night's Dream will be repeated. It is proposed to have a baby show for ages from one to three years also a "Venus rising from the sea."

A very nice way to cook mackerel for breakfast is, after freshening it, to boil it for ten minutes, take it out of the water, drain it, remove the backbone, then pour over the fish a gravy made of milk thickened with flour, and with a lump of butter added. The gravy is just like that which you make for milk toast.

Wasp and Bee Stings.

A correspondent of an English journal gives the following simple remedy for an almost instantaneously removing the pain of wasp and bee stings. He says: "Immediately on being stung, place the hollow barrel of a key around the sting, and press until it begins to hurt. On removing the key the sting will be found lying outside the puncture it has made, and inside the ring formed by the pressure of the key barrel. All pain disappears at once, no swelling takes place, and in a few minutes it is difficult to find again where one has been stung. The sting, in fact, has been extracted before its venom has had time to get absorbed into the tissues." He adds that he had just seen in the Times an account of the death of two persons caused by the sting of wasps. We have every now and then heard also of similar fatalities in the United States from bees as well as wasps.

The above method of removing the sting answers very well, but a fine forceps, if at hand, is better than a key to rid one of the sting. But if the poison is left behind, the wound should be well sucked, and ammonia (sal volatile) applied to it. Scraping a raw onion and placing the pulp on the wound is a good remedy. If stung in the mouth or throat, chew a piece of raw onion and swallow slowly, or suck in some onion juice. Laundry blue is also recommended.

Yet one of the most certain things, which we have often used to remove the pain from the sting of either wasp, bee, or mosquito, is fine soil taken up fresh from the ground, and bound tightly over the wound. This is at hand at all times in the country. The removal of pain is almost instantaneous on application. We presume this would be efficacious in other insect bites or stings—perhaps that of the tarantula, scorpion, and asp of hot climates.

Confidence Between Mother and Son.

"There is a tide in the affairs" of boys, which needs to be "taken at the flood." Many a mother loses control over her son at a critical period of life simply because she fails to realize the changes his character is undergoing, and does not appreciate the accessions of manliness of which he is very conscious. She cannot with wisdom treat the boy, whose head now comes above her shoulders, just as she did the boy of a year or two ago. To keep his confidence is worth all it may cost her in thought and effort. To treat him with respect, as an individual, is sometimes the only way by which she can hope to succeed. Ridicule—that dreadful ordeal of being "laughed at," which is a torture to a sensitive boy—has been the means of turning him away from his mother and father to companions and confidants unworthy of him. Suppose it does seem absurd to you that your son should have a moustache and walk home from church with some one besides his sister, do not laugh at these evidences of the common nature. One of the worldly and surest sentiments of which the human heart is capable is that which a mother experiences when she yields her own first place in the heart of her son to another woman. After years of devotion and sacrifice she acknowledges that he is no longer hers, and henceforth she expects only the respect and kindly interest which the best of men ever give to their mothers, and to render this experience possible it is well worth while to do all that woman may do.—Evening Post.

POSTPONED.—The ball to have been given at Bishop Station on Thanksgiving night for the benefit of the school there has been postponed till December 12th on account of the celebrations at other places in the valley. PLEASANT PARTY.—On the evening of the 23d a company of ladies and gentleman met at the house of Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Eibeshutz to celebrate the anniversary of their wedding. ARRESTED FOR CONTEMPT.—Last Saturday morning, while at breakfast in the Blaney House, Mr. John Alexander made a remark in reference to the Silva case, then in course of trial. One of the jurors being present at the time, hearing the remark made by Mr. Alexander, also said something. The occurrence was reported, and a charge made against Mr. Alexander of trying to influence a juror; the Court ordered the Sheriff to take him in custody and detain him till Monday morning for examination, unless bail were given for his appearance. Two sureties gave bail for the appearance of Mr. Alexander at the time specified, and he was then set at liberty. On Monday morning Mr. Alexander appeared in Court, but an examination was postponed without time being set for his re-examination.

Correspondence.

OFFICE OF WATTERSON BROS.,
BENTON, Mono Co., Cal.
November 28th, 1884.

Messrs. Harris & Rhine, Independence, Cal:—DEAR SIRS:—In view of the fact that the Carson and Colorado R. R. Co. purpose running but every second day from Dec. 4th on, would it not be well for all of us living in this country to be thinking about adopting some plan to secure a daily mail as at present?

When the R. R. shuts us off, could we not petition to have the old mail carrying by stages re-established, and over the old road where people live, to run, say, from Belleville or Candelaria to Independence or Lone Pine. At present the cost of delivering the mail at the post offices south of Belleville is greater than when carried by stage.

We have also written to Bishop Creek on this matter, and perhaps you could see the Postmaster and other business men in your town, and after consultation, please let us hear what you have to say on the subject, for perhaps by all combining we may be able to do something.

If you thought a conference would be advisable, we here in Benton are willing to send some one to meet representatives from your place and Lone Pine at Bishop Creek, and we might be able to get at the business sooner by representatives from each place meeting and agreeing on some definite plan than by corresponding with each other; for often a great deal of time is lost in correspondence on matters of this kind.

Please let us hear from you at your earliest convenience. Yours resp'y,
WATTERSON BROS.

ROLL OF HONOR.—The following is the roll of honor at Bishop Station school for the month ending November 28th; 1st Division:—Willie Dehy 98; Hattie Man, 96; Peter Conroy, 93; John Dehy, 97; 2nd Division:—Stella Man, 89; James Dehy, 89; Franklin Huckaby, 87; Cora Wagner, 87.

INSANE.—Yesterday morning Deputy Sheriff Drake brought Redding down from Bishop Creek. He was examined before Judge Hannah by Doctors Blair and Stevenson and adjudged insane. He is a former inmate but was dismissed as cured last spring. Sheriff Gregg will take him below.

SOCIAL GATHERING.—On Thursday (Thanksgiving) evening a goodly assemblage met at the Blaney House and chased the hours with flying feet until the hands of the clock indicated that the time was at hand when graveyards (and well flowers) yawn; when the Toms on the back fence make night hideous; when "the moping owl doth to the moon complain" and Freddy looks at his watch and said; "Who'd 'a' thought it; What did you say Lily?" All expressed themselves very much pleased with the evening's entertainment.

GRAND JURY.—The following are the names of the Grand Jurors to meet next Monday: Albert Wayland, R. Van Dyke, Allen Matlick, A. N. Bell, H. A. Rittgers, E. Powers, George H. Marr, W. F. Matlack, James Shaw, George Stevens, James Mitchell, Samuel Hall, J. A. McKenzie, J. S. Gorman, W. K. Miller, John E. Jones, Abraham Parker, Andrew Dell, J. J. Stewart, I. P. Rittgers, Thomas Hill, J. D. Harger, Barney Peeler, L. A. James, John Lucas, A. K. Eagley, N. C. Young, A. A. Cashbaugh, J. J. McMurry, Julius Roeper.

ARASTRA CANYON. — McDonough & Kisler have got their new pan running, and are making satisfactory progress building their mill. Recent developments in Arastra Canyon, Hunter's Canyon, and at Keynot, are making quite a stir in Beveridge district. Fuentes had a sample of 150 pounds of ore, from a recent discovery in Arastra, worked about a week ago, that netted him $100. Prospecting on claims owned by Mitchell, Wagner and Thompson has shown up some very rich ore. These parties own several ledges that promise big results. An effect of these recent developments is that very many claims are being located; blanks enough have been ordered by one party to make an owning for half the district. Tom McDonough brought over some samples of rock last Saturday from several of the new finds that are very rich in gold. Many of these are rich enough to make fine cabinet specimens.

EXPLOSION AT MOJAVE.—While unloading a freight car at the depot, at Mojave, last Saturday at 4:30 P. M. one of the truck men accidently broke a package of acids, which set fire to the car. As there were no facilities at hand for surpressing the fire, it soon communicated to some powder, when an explosion took place, shattering the car, the side of the depot building, and sending the fire in every direction and placing it out of control. As it was known the fire would soon communicate with ninety cases of giant powder, every effort was made to get the remaining cars away from the fire before the final explosion would take place. The men succeeded in unlocking and backing a few of the loaded cars up the grade out of the way when the ninety cases of giant powder exploded with a force of sixty hundred kegs of ordinary blasting powder scattering and distroying the depot building, cars and every thing in the way. The report was distinctly heard for a distance of twenty-five miles. The people had time to escape, as some fifteen minutes elapsed after the first explosion occured and it became evident the giant powder would be fired by the flames. The concussion was so great that it brought nearly every one in the place to the ground and broke the windows out of the building and the cars that were some distance from the explosion. No blame can possibly be attached to the company or its employees, as the contents of the package could not possibly be known by the freight hands engaged in unloading the cars. The loss of property in the building, cars and contents is variously estimated at from $10,000 to $25,000.—Los Angeles Herald.

THE SILVA CASE.

Mr. C. Anthony was the first witness called on Monday; his examination occupied the whole day, including an evening session of the Court. Just before adjournment on Monday evening, counsel for the defense insisted upon having the Sheriff call as a witness Professor Price of San Francisco, counsel knowing at the same time that the witness was not in the county. Comments made at the time were not complimentary to counsel as a lawyer or a person of common sense. A warrant had been issued by the Court to the Sheriff of San Francisco to produce in said Court Professor Price as a witness in this case. The San Francisco officer refused to bring Mr. Price here, unless the whole expenses of the trip for himself and witness were paid in advance. On Tuesday the defendent was called and sworn. His examination occupied the whole day. On Wednesday Eddy was recalled but nothing was elicted. Price was called in rebuttal for the prosecution. Reddy opened the prosecution in the afternoon, followed by Miner. On Friday morning Miner closed his argument and Reddy went on. An evening session was held when the jury was charged and delivered in custody of the Sheriff. After being out over fifteen hours they stated that there was no reasonable posibility of their agreeing and were discharged. Court adjourned until two o'clock. Court was called at two o'clock and again adjourned that counsel might agree upon a time for a new trial. Court reassembled at three but counsel could not agree upon a time. Judge Arnot set the case for April 6, 1885; objected to by counsel for defense on the ground that the Judge presiding had no further jurisdiction in the case. The Judge stated that while he had no desire to obtrude still he had a duty to perform; and from the tenor of the letter calling upon him to try the case he deemed that duty was to continue with it. Defense asked that Silva be released upon his own cognizance which was denied. This case has cost the county a considerable amount and will cost a great deal more; it is a case with the taxpayer of grin and bear it.

THE OTHER SIDE OF THE INYOS.—Mr. P. A. Chalfant came in a few days since from the Deep Spring country, and from him we have the following: Milling operations at the Greenly Mill, Cottonwood Creek, are suspended for the present, and may not be resumed before Spring, except it should be upon the large lot of tailings on hand, which, with proper appliances, will undoubtedly pay very well to rework. Greenly, Broder and Sullivan will for a time give their attention to their silver mines, chiefly on account of assessment work, yet with the view of taking out ore for shipment, for which purpose they will soon have ready sacked several tons that will, as shown by former shipments, yield not less than $400 per ton, silver. There are no local facilities for working this class of ores; this trouble, however, is quite likely to be obviated before Spring, either by the addition of suitable appliances to the Greenly mill, or through the early completion of the McMurry furnace at Antelope, of which there is almost a certainty..... Payson & Chalmers, at Antelope, have out from six to ten tons of good smelting ores, ready for the furnace or shipment .... Martin and Rogers, six miles north of Cottonwood, have ready for milling three or four tons of gold "grub stake", ore, apparently worth fully $150 per ton..... Stevens & Co.'s two 12-foot steam arastras, at Pigeon Springs, are said to be running successfully, with plenty of $30 ore to keep them running indefinitely. Some three weeks since the engineer at these works, name to our informant unknown, became choked while eating an apple and in twenty minutes was dead..... O. K. Berry, Recorder of Deep Spring District, was badly hurt a short time ago by a bucking mule..... Sam. Piper has recently taken out of a small mine near Cottonwood several hundred pounds of silver ore supposed to be worth not less than $4,000 per ton. He has taken from the same ledge a ton or two of exceedingly rich gold ore..... Affairs generally in Deep Spring, and the adjoining districts—Palmetto, Sylvania and Lida—if not flourishing, are certainly quite as much so both in fact and in promise as any other portion of this region.

Here and There.

—The ride to the depot is getting to be quite popular.

—Waterfowl are coming in on the river.

—A certain young man in town says he don't believe in a spotter, anyhow.

—Shooting is very good at Camp Independence, albeit the game is rather shy.

—Various bets were offered as to the verdict of the jury on Friday night but no one appeared to be blooded.

—It looks as though Christmas was coming. A young friend of ours received by express a doll the other day. 'Tis true it was in a rather dilapidated condition; but then it is suspected of having been sent by a sailor, and may have seen rough weather.

BONDS.—Bonds have been filed with the Clerk by all the officer's elect for the ensuing erm. McGee's bondsmen are John Dehy, G. M. Clarke, W. G. McCrosky, J. W. McMurry, James Jones, Isaac Harris, John A. Lank, O. I. Mairs, and J. D. Mairs. Hunters are John Shepherd, Clark M. Joslin, Isaac Harris, Nathan Rhine, William Barrows and A. W. Eibeshutz; Hardy's principal bondsmen are Isaac Harris Nathan Rhine, C. B. Rawson, John Kispert, William Barrows, W. K. Miller, W. R. Tibbitts, R. W. Ford, Thos. E. Jones and J. G. Burchim; the entire list numbers thirty five and represents $122000. Matlack's are A. Parker and Thos. Webb; Seely's are O. I. Mairs and Nathan Rhine.

STATED MEETING.—A stated meeting of Inyo Lodge, No. 221, F. & A. M., will be held at its hall to-night.

National Bee Keepers' Convention

EDITOR INDEPENDENT:—From the report of the Convention I condense the following, which may be of interest to bee-keepers in Inyo County:

After a discussion about the prevention of swarming it was

"Resolved, that this Convention can give no fixed rules for the entire prevention of swarming while producing comb-honey; but the following methods tend to its prevention: Plenty of room, air, shade, and introducing young queens at the beginning of the surplus honey harvest."—In regard to

COMB-FOUNDATION,

Several members held that 8 square feet to the pound is sufficiently thin for comb-foundation for sections. It was finally agreed that 10 feet to the pound is the proper thickness. Mr. J. Van Deusen read the following essay on comb foundation: "The importance of comb foundation is evident to the great majority of bee-keepers. Its early stages of experiment have passed. The apiarist of to-day can justly boast of the best comb foundation in the world. Time was when the highest ambition of the apiarist was to obtain a 'starter'—a comb-guide; but with the improvement in foundation, the guide is a thing of the past. The necessities of to-day are full sheets of worker foundation to build up colonies by which we are enabled, in a great measure, to control the number of drones in the hive, which has always been a serious drawback in the production of honey. The bee-keeper of to-day can hive his colony on full sheets of comb-foundation, and in less than 24 hours, under favorable circumstances, can see the queen supplied with cells, in which to deposit brood as fast as she can use them, and the workers storing honey. They can also fill their sections with foundation, and under favorable circumstances, have them nicely filled and sealed over in four, six or eight days. With these facilities, it is left with individual bee-keepers to decide, whether they will use a clean, light foundation, which will make a surplus honey to please the most fastidious taste and build up a reputation for nice honey, such as no other nation can produce; or whether they will use a dirty, heavy foundation, and make such a honey as no one ever wants the second time. Choose ye between the two. Make a nice surplus honey and establish a reputation which will command a ready sale at a good price. You have the facilities for making either. It is for you to decide whether you will use an inferior foundation and ruin your reputation for nice honey, or use a superior foundation and establish a reputation such as no other nation can compete with."

A paper from Mr. T. G. Newman, editor of the American Bee Journal, contained the following: "In the matter of shipping honey to market: The classification is so high that it amounts to almost a robbery; and to seek relief, some bee-keepers ship extracted honey as 'syrup' at less than half the rates demanded for honey. Tariffs ought to be revised and liquid honey should be rated the same as syrup. Those bee keepers who have a desire to be exactly right, and feel delicate about the matter of shipping honey as 'syrup,' are therefore compelled to pay double the amount which their less scrupulous neighbors have to pay for freight to the large marts of the world. Some grades of syrup sell as high as honey, and there is no reason why both should not be graded alike, when one is as easily and cheaply handled as the other."

A lengthy article by D. A. Jones, on "The cure of foul breed by fasting," was read by the secretary. The gist of the essay was, that the bulk of the bees in a diseased hive should be removed to and confined in an empty box covered with wire cloth, placed in a dark, cool cellar and kept there from three to six days, until they commence to drop from the cluster and crawl in a weak, stupid manner. They should then be placed in a new clean hive, furnished with comb foundation, and fed a little honey or syrup, when they will commence foraging for themselves. Sufficient bees should be left in the old hive to take care of the brood, and when it is all hatched, they should be treated in the same manner. The combs should then be melted up. The honey, after being boiled, may be fed back to the bees; the wax can be made into comb-foundation, and the hive and frames should be boiled a few minutes, when they may again be occupied.

The next convention will be held in the fall of 1885 at the city of Detroit, Michigan. WM. MUTH-RASMUSSEN.

For the benefit of our readers we will explain that comb-foundation consists of embossed sheets of wax, forming the septum or base of the honey comb. Two styles of foundation are made; that intended for comb honey being exceedly thin and delicate, while the foundation for brood-combs is made heavy and strong to prevent it from breaking under the weight of the bees, while they are working on it. The bottom of the cells is made of about the same thickness as natural comb, but the side walls contain sufficient material from which the bees can complete the comb without secreting any new wax, except for sealing the cells. Mr. Wm. Muth-Rasmussen, of Independence, manufactures and keeps for sale both kinds, of which we have samples at this office. He will, during the coming winter, make several hundred pounds of foundation from his own wax, and is also willing to manufacture wax, sent him by other parties into comb foundation.

BIG TIME.—From one of the Independence boys who attended the party at Big Pine we learn they had a very jolly time. A large number of people were present and all enjoyed themselves hugely. The music was the best that could be procured. The ball was held at Hartshorn's Hotel and an excellent supper prepared by them. Dancing was continued until the specter Dawn surprised them and warned them to disperse.

NOTES.

Extracts from a Diary Kept by One of Our Candidates While Canvassing.

Electioneering is one of the things which seem funny to a new beginner, and the first man you apply to for a vote, seems almost equal to asking your sweetheart to become your partner for better or for worse in battling with the vicissitudes of this life. Such was the experience of the writer; and God bless the first man, who told me what I was after, thereby saving me the mortification of opening the subject. After that, experience seemed to transmogrify into "cheek" as the buttonholes seemed to yield to the persistent clutchings of the hand, seeking support of the honest voter.

To begin the tour through the county a horse was procured—and I can recommend him highly to all classes of "drummers" as being the most efficient animal for that business that could be found anywhere. Every path leading from the main road he is sure to take; every house that comes in view he is desirous of stopping at; and if there is any hay in sight, he has a curiosity to sample it in order to test the quality of this season's production, which is good, and of immense quantity; stack after stack looming up wherever the eye may glance proving that Inyo county is against the world for hay.

As hay was not the object of my search, I chanced to fall in upon one of the leading farmers, and in a bad time—for him, I mean. Just as I was drawing my steed to a halt, and rehearsing my mode of attack, I heard the music of the triangle, and that meant something to eat. I must say that the matron of the place is the "boss" of cookery, and hope I do not offend when I mention her name as being Mrs. Tibbetts, of Tibbetts Bros. ranch.

Congratulating ourselves upon the good treatment received at the hands of mine host, we—the horse and I—moved on to Mr. Curtis's—and if I had known that Pete Forbes was there I would have gone in some other direction. Not that I have anything against Pete in particular, but there was the owner of the place himself, and they both being Democrats, don't you forget it, I kept mum on politics; and confined myself more to the condition of their constitutions than to that of the constitution of the United States. Well, as soon as I found out that the ladies of the house would support me on the ground of my being a married man, and one of the ladies being single at that, I went on my way rejoicing, hoping at the same time that their influence might extend to the extreme limits of the county.

Sheid, Goodale and the others are too busy to be detained from their work to take much part in the interests of the would-be servants of the county; and the less one tries to get their "anger" in on them the better they like it.

Bidding good-bye to Fish Springs, we find our way to Big Pine some time after dusk, and almost too late for supper, but the Hartshorn Bros. are always prepared to feed both man and beast with the best of material and stimulants for all who desire them. After the satisfaction of a good square meal I stepped over to Jim Smith's store, then to Harry Burt's, where one can get an A 1 article in his line, and it only costs 12½ cents to be convinced. After passing the time of day, discussing the political attitude and cussing the dull times generally he remarked that he would go his straight. I have no doubt he meant his ticket, but sometimes a meaning is misconstrued. Well, the hands of his sun regulator points to the hour that reminds us of the old adage, "Early to bed and early to rise,"—and, to make a long story short, I went to bed.

Crit. Hampton has charge of the school, and is teaching the youth how to climb the "tree of knowledge." I did not ascertain whether he was required to use any branches on them.

We now bid good-by to the city, and circulate around among the farmers, who have their hands full of all kinds of produce, from a new laid egg to that of a house full of children. After leaving Mr. Hessian's place, where I met a sight that would gladden the heart of most any energetic young man—two young ladies, and the old gent out in the hayfield—I rode on to Mr. Watson's place just in time to partake of supper. Am beginning to flatter myself that I am somewhat of a "bum." "Two males in wan day and divil the cint for that same!" Am beginning to think that it is cheaper to travel than it is to stay at home. If any of you think that I am telling you the truth, try it and see. Had to drop in on Thos. Forbes just as he was feeding his stock, following him around the corral as he dished out each animal's rations, until the lateness of the day reminded me that I had some six miles to travel before I would arrive at Bishop Creek. Trusting to Lies and the good judgment of my Arabian steed, I mounted and was deposited at John Clark's stable door about bed time, where all who wish their faithful servants of the equine genus cared for will find that John is the boy to do it. He has the mail contract, and carries passengers to and from Bishop Creek to the depot to the satisfaction of all patronizing him.

George Stevens is still selling away on fruit cans, and as Winter is coming on and you will need a stove, he is prepared to fit you out from an infant specimen of a coal-oil stove to that of a range of sufficient capacity for a lush house for forty people. He has a complete stock of hardware and tinware, and when he hasn't got in his line, he will send and get to order if you only hold out the necessary inducements. He will treat you like a gentleman, and no one ever knew him to have a fault until he was nominated for Supervisor.

Messrs. Munzinger & Phillipsy have one of the most complete livery establishments in the county, and off you don't tinks vot I vas sait," all you have to do is to go and see. Louie himself will conduct you all over the place and show you how he conducts his whole "pisiness."

Mr. Stoutenborough has a store where the public can be accommodated with every thing in the line of general merchandise, groceries, etc., and the genial Bud will wait on you to your satisfaction.

Mrs. Drake has accommodations for the hungry individual and puts up first class grub. It is quite a homelike place and the landlady a very agreeable person; and you would not lose anything, socially speaking, and at the same time get full return for the capital invested in a meal worthy of a foreign prince.

The upper school is taught by Mrs. Welch, and the lower one by Mr. and Mrs. Clark, formerly of Lone Pine.

The churches are presided over by Rev. Clark and Rev. Nims; and I must give Bishop Creek credit in being the only community who have a building for the sole purpose of worship in the whole of Inyo, which doesn't look well for the balance of the county, and to strangers would go a long way in convincing them that the greater per cent of the population were very irreligious and looked to no one for their daily bread.

The school at Bishop Station is taught by Miss Minnie Thomson, one of the Independence girls; and from accounts of her previous experience, she no doubt will give entire satisfaction.

The ranchers who happened to be at home were busy as bees, getting together the product of their summer's labor; some have gone to the valleys in the mountains to gather their stock which has spent the summer in these mountain ranges; others who have got through with the rush of gathering crops have gone to the hills to get their supply of winter's wood.

In going to Round Valley we find everybody busy cutting hay; and both threshers were at work early and late, putting the finishing touches on the few remaining stacks of golden grain, of which Round Valley "takes the cake" at the present time.

I visited Mr. Jones' fish ponds and saw many specimens of the finny tribe. He intends to convert several acres into piscicuture and no doubt the land covered with water will be more valuable than if it had been sown in grain.

Miss Carrie Stoutenborough attends to the education of the little ones with commendable zeal.

Crossing over that which but a few years ago was a barren desert what a change has intervened! The country has been transformed into fields of grain and alfalfa; old residents have changed their locations, others have gone to distant places, and, alas! friends of other days have been carried away to that "Great Unknown" and left sorrow in many a household.

Crossing over the river at the Polita ford I dropped in on the farmers who have located land that but a short time ago people would have laughed at the idea of taking up. But now that land produces one ton of wheat per acre. It seems strange that more energetic individuals like the ones already located there who are interested in tilling the soil and stock raising do not run a ditch and build themselves happy homes in this region.

They have a school here presided over by Miss Howell. They all like her; at least an old bachelor told me so; and if you can get one of them to admit such a thing you can bet she is all she is represented to be.

At last I concluded to return to where seven days previously I had started out without a blemish—I don't mean of character. But upon my return I find my pants need patching and that it takes seven days to make the trip and ten to get used to riding horseback. I'll now rest awhile and give others a rest.

AN ELECTRIC KENTUCKIAN

Marvelous Power of Everett Gilbert of Spencer County.

You have often heard of the electrical eel found in some of the waters of South America, but who has ever heard of an electrical man—one constantly surcharged with electricity? I became acquainted with such a case some time ago in Spencer county, Kentucky. The man's name is Everett Gilbert, and his age is now about 26. He says that about eight years ago he went out on a very warm and sultry day in June, to work on his father's farm. A thunder storm coming up, he with others took refuge in a house not far away. Drawing his chair to the door, he took out his pocketknife, opened it, and began sticking it into the top of the chair. A blinding flash came from a very dark cloud at which he was looking, and he fell to the floor, and was insensible for several hours. When consciousness returned, he felt excruciating pains all through his body, and was in a critical condition for several weeks. He gradually recovered, but was unable to work any more that summer. The following winter he went to school in Taylorsville, five or six miles from his home. He noticed that at certain times he was the subject of very peculiar sensations. His father, a physician, Dr. Robert S. Gilbert, prescribed remedies that failed to give relief.

One night Everett got home from school just before a severe thunder storm came up. He was sitting on the front steps when he was suddenly seized with violent spasms. He was taken into the house. His father observed that these spasms and twitchings of the hands and arms always came on before a thunder storm, and soon found that his boy was surcharged with electricity. He tried various experiments to draw it off. These were partially successful. Everett says that one day under a shed in a wheat field, during a storm, his daily tortures were fearfully severe. It occurred to him that if he should strip himself naked and lie down in the mud, it might act as a conductor, and give him relief. He did so, and the effect was agonizing. The electricity left his body with such a terrible shock that it seemed as if his side had been torn open and the flesh was being stripped from the bones. The agony for a moment was indescribable. It was like a red-hot iron passing down his side with inconceivable rapidity. He afterwards proceeded with greater caution, and experienced great relief on such occasions by removing his shoes and stockings, and wading in the mud.

He said that one day on his return home from Louisville in a buggy, a storm came up, and his whole body seemed filled with electricity. The pain became insupportable, and he thought that he would try to discharge the fluid by using the tire of a wheel as a conductor. Seizing it eagerly with his hand he was thrown violently head foremost into the road, where, after lying a few moments, he recovered. He afterward touched the wheel cautiously with his finger, and thus was relieved.

One most singular fact is that only the left side of his body is affected. No matter how heavily overcharged that side might be, the right side would not act as a conductor and draw it off. He suffered pain only in the left side, including also the left side of his head, in which it was often excruciating.

About six years ago, the electricity seeming to have left him, he went to Texas, but was compelled to return in about two months. He says the air where he was (Sulphur Springs, Hopkins county) seemed all the time filled with electricity. He could scarcely breathe in it, and felt himself in an electrical condition wherever he went. One day he met a friend—a delicate young man—and they shook hands. The friend shouted: "You burn me; let go."

The young man wrung his hand, and said he felt innumerable sensations like needle pricks darting through his body. Mr. Gilbert told him of his condition, and at his young friend's request rubbed his arm and head, the latter saying it did him much good. He seemed to be, as probably many others are, negatively electrified, as it required but slight contact to produce a shock. On leaving Texas he found that his right side was affected as well as his left, and has seemed about equally so ever since.

He is sensible of the approach of a thunder storm twenty-four hours before its occurrence, and then suffers unutterable misery—first, a numbness particularly in the left side, followed by a most distressing feeling of despondency. These feelings increase with the approach of the storm. He then discharges the electricity that is in him by a conductor every few minutes, for if he delays doing it until the storm is actually on, it cannot be discharged as rapidly as it accumulates, and he suffers intense pains in his head and body, which he describes as sharp and darting, like needle points tipped with fire. The brain seems alive with these fiery little darts and the muscles jerk and twitch, and those in the arm contract into knots. He predicts rain with infallible certainty. Sometimes people are very incredulous, but they always find he is correct. He is a very large man, fully six feet high, but he says the air was so full of electricity during the remarkably wet summer several years ago, that in a few weeks he was reduced in weight from 215 pounds to 195.

If he is asleep when a storm comes up it never fails to awaken him, and if he is lying with his head toward it, he must get up and put his feet in that direction, for unless he does so the pains in his head are intolerable. He can easier bear them in his feet. If his left side happens to be turned toward the storm he feels a peculiar jarring sensation, and awakens immediately. He says that if he holds out his hand, or points his finger toward a storm cloud, the electricity rushes from it to him.

The psychological effects are still more remarkable. He has been going to school nearly all his life. Before he was struck by lightning he was particularly bright in grammar and history. He was quite familiar with the history of the world, and was well advanced in geography, but was especially dull in arithmetic. Immediately after the shock he forgot nearly al he ever knew about grammar, geography and history, and can now hardly name half the capitals of the States, but he is the wonder in his section of the country for his phenomenal skill in arithmetic. He says he could talk for a week about his wonderful gift in this department, and then by no means exhaust the subject. He says he does not reason out any of the questions or problems proposed to him, but that he simply feels them out, as he expresses it, solving them as by intuition. He never uses a slate or pencil and works all examples that have ever been presented to him in his brain. Another curious fact is that the more fully charged with electricity he is the more readily are mathematical questions suggested to his mind, and the more easily are they solved. He has often been tested with difficult problems, to which he has given correct solutions with surprising rapidity. On one occasion a young lady gave him an example to work, and told him she would give him a week in which to solve it. He told her that if it could be done he would work it out that night. As he started to go up stairs he turned toward her and said, "It cannot be worked."

She was astonished and asked him how he knew. He replied: "I cannot possibly tell you, but I have felt my way to the answer in twenty different ways, and am sure there can be no answer given."

He was correct. His instinct never fails him. He can tell many stories of people who, having heard of his wonderful faculty, could not believe that he possessed it to such a degree. It is as impenetrable a mystery to himself as to any one else, and he does not attempt to explain it. At one time he began to write an arithmetic, but he found, before he had proceeded far, that he had worked a dozen examples in as many different ways, and that it would be impossible for him to lay down any invariable rule, so he abandoned the undertaking.

Scientists have long been in doubt as to whether there is any difference between electricity and magnetism. Everett Gilbert thinks he has settled this question. During a remarkably fine display of aurora borealis he was awakened one night from sleep by a very unusual sensation. He felt a strong inclination to run around, to dance, and to sing, and was also moved by an irresistible impulse to change his position in bed. He arose and saw an exceedingly brilliant aurora borealis. Thinking his peculiar sensations were produced by it, he again lay down. As before stated, he always found it necessary, for the alleviation of pain, to place his feet toward clouds laden with electricity. On that night he had to place his head toward the aurorial light. The effect of electricity is always to produce despondency and cause him to suffer much pain; but on that occasion he felt great exhilaration of spirits and suffered no pain. He therefore infers that there must be a wide difference between these two invisible forces. On several similar occasions he has felt the same kind of wild exhilaration, precisely the reverse of the sensations experienced when the atmosphere is charged with electricity.

Another effect of a highly electric condition of the air is to produce paroxysms of anger, which he finds it exceedingly difficult to control. On these occasions he falls in a fit, similar to the one he experienced at the time of the first stroke of lightning, eight years ago. Once at such a time he fought with another boy, and fell senseless just as soon as he struck him.

Young Gilbert's bed is in a neat little room on the second floor of his father's house, and stands between two windows. Fastened around one of the bed posts at the head is a heavy magnetized iron wire, which extends down on the outside of the house. The end is submerged in a vessel on the ground containing soft mortar, whence the fluid is conducted into the ground. Everett, in the presence of a visitor, seized this wire with his fingers, and it began to tremble all the way down. "There it goes now," said he, and in a moment after the visitor took hold of it below, and there was a very perceptible discharge of electricity. He then took hold of Gilbert with both hands, thus establishing a circuit. The electric current began to circulate immediately in rather a weak degree, but producing the tingling sensation felt under such circumstances.

Everett mentions as another strange fact, that whenever he is surcharged with electricity he perceives a decided taste of sulphur in his mouth, which is imparted to everything he eats. So disagreeable is this that sometimes for days together he can hardly eat enough to sustain life. He also says that whenever he becomes excited from any cause, or overheated, this same sulphurous taste fills his mouth. The tips of his fingers have become quite hardened and calloused from the oft-repeated discharges of electricity through them, which at first used to scorch and burn them.

How to Press Autum Leaves.

"Will you help me to press some leaves?" the maiden asked the lover.

"If you will fasten them in your waist belt I'll see what I can do," he answered. And thus a popular method of pressing autum leaves was invented.

"Are shrouds classed as kilt suits?" asks the Pittsburgh Telegraph. We have heard them called "spirit wrappers." Although they are intended for the close of life they are not designed as the clothes of life.

WITHIN THE FORGE.

He stood up gravely to his work,
And little recked that the day was long,
Never was he the one to shirk
His task amid the grumbling throng.

The plaint was tossed from lip to lip,
That times were hard and wages low,
He only grasped with firmer grip
The hammer to deal a heavier blow.

Thick was the smoke and fierce the heat,
And dark as demons the men appeared
From dawn to dusk, on weary feet,
And all with grime and dust besmeared.

Never a murmur broke from him,
Snatches, instead, of an old-time song,
The while his fellows, scowling and grim,
Sullenly grumbled the whole day long.

He thought not much of his toilsome life,
Thinking of labor but makes the more;
But he smiled at the thoughts of the faithful wife,
And the children that played about the door.

Thus he stood by the furnace glare,
The brave, strong soul with his heart aglow;
And life to him was a song and prayer,
As it is to all who make it so.

Long Branch Style.

This is a great hotel. At present it shelters not only a woman with forty brand-new complete costumes, but a—well, God made him, therefore let him be called a man—with sixty spick-span fresh suits, nine horses, and four servants. The lady in question is Mrs. Moses Fraley, of St. Louis, wife of the grain speculator. Of her wardrobe the whole of the immense house is aware, not alone because it is dazzled three times a day and between meals by miraculous toilets, but because, though occupying an extensive suite of rooms, two of which are turned into a wardrobe, the corridor into which they open has a wainscoting of trunks, varying in size from alligator hat-boxes to the huge "togas," opening like chests of drawers. When Mrs. Fraley, who is a large woman with blonde hair, has astonished us for the fortieth time with a stunning combination of dress, hat, parasol, gloves, stockings, and shoes to match, she will start for pastures new, and begin all over again, as is the mode with women of fashion. For example, there arrived this morning a lady who has been doing Saratoga with thirteen trunks, and who lunched in a miracle of chocolate satin sprinkled with natural-sized walnuts of golden hue, with bronzed shoes, which, by the way, are very fashionable, and in this case cut low enough to display golden silk stockings. On her head was perched a coquettish turban, trimmed with a dozen gold and brown rings.

As to the masculine wearer of five dozen different costumes, Mr. E. Berry Wall, of New York, I am told he first became famous through his infinite variety of clothes and his lending that amusing young fraud, Lord Abercromby, $7,000. I cannot vouch for the truth of it, but it is said that he and Mrs. Fraley regard each other in the light of bitter rivals, though the latter has the advantage, for she can wear diamonds in a dozen different ways, while Mr. Wall is obliged to confine himself to studs, pin, and sleeve buttons of blazing stones.

While I write I can see through the window the St. Louis matron getting into her carriage for a drive. She has on a wonderful gown—a peach colored silk covered with immense damask roses of crimson velvet pile; the underskirt is flounced alternately with crimson velvet and rose point; the cut of the corsage is concealed by a mantle of the brocade; a tiny bonnet of lace and crimson pompons covers her flaxen puffs; rubies and diamonds tremble in the sun. Mrs. Fraley steps into her satin-lined carriage with a dexterous touch, arranges her skirts and settles herself among the cushions under the shade of a white lace, rose-lined umbrella. Presently Mr. Fraley's valet rushes out with a vast bouquet of red roses. Then the lady gives the signal, the liveried footman hops on his perch at the back, and the liveried coachman in front starts up the span—one pure white and one jet black steed, with huge yellow collars around their necks, to the manifest detriment of their appearance.—Long Branch Letter to Cincinnati Enquirer.

The Gay Young Widow.

If any one who has traveled much in the summer has encountered a fashionable summer resort hotel without its widow it is exceptional, says the Philadelphia Times. The widow is inevitable to the surroundings. She is always interesting, generally has fine eyes, and dresses well and wears diamonds. But it is her manner, as a rule, that is most attractive. In nine cases out of ten she has a little girl whose early retirement to the arms of Morpheus is her great anxiety, or rather one of her greatest, for she seems anxious sometimes if left alone even after relieved of this annoyance. Her manner is usually brilliant and effusive, and almost always insures her the notice and attention of gentlemen. She does things, as a matter of course, that the young unmarried ladies are forbidden by their mothers to do, and the mothers have a hard time explaining to the daughters why what is right for the widow is wrong for them. The mothers take revenge very often by misrepresenting the widow and telling the daughters to have nothing to do with her. But the widow has a good time, and very often the unmarried girls don't. Still, according to her own standards, she keeps within bounds, and no matter how hardly pressed is generally mistress of the situation. This is the gay young widow. Of course there are others who are saints in deportment.

Corn-meal muffins are appetizing. To one pint of meal add one cup of flour, a lump of butter the size of an egg, two eggs, nearly half a pint of sweet milk, and a quarter of a cup of fresh yeast. Mix this at night and in the morning [illegible]

Bill Nye's Press Notices.

Pending a brief interval between this date and the opening of the lecture season, I have been quite busy preparing my press notices and opinions of my lectures in advance. The labor and annoyance of preparing opinions and press notices on a lecture that has never been delivered, are very great, and I am very glad that it is over. I have taken the liberty of sending these glowing endorsements first to Opinion, intending to cut them out afterward and furnish them to my advance agent, to be used hereafter in advertising the lecture.

The Semi-Weekly Deathrattle says: "This great intellectual What Is It delivered his prize reverie here last evening, and will repeat it at Spoon Lake to-morrow evening if our hotel will let go of the lecturer's spike-tail coat, now held for food destroyed by the latter last night and this morning. We were present at the lecture, and suffered along with another of our fellow citizens, whose name is kindly witheld on account of his family."

The Small-pox at Work says: "Nothing in the lecture last evening was more gratifying than the twenty minutes given the audience in which to weep. Every one present, including the lecturer, went out between the acts to shed a tear, and no one, the lecturer included, came back. This alone was worth the price of admission. We hope that he will again come this way, and after telling us what disposition to make of his remains, repeat his lecture of last night."

"It beats anything I ever saw"—[Dr. McCosh.

"I would be willing to go one hundred miles to see the gestures and tableaux alone."—[Blind Tom.

"I would not try to keep house without it."—[W. H. Vanderbilt.

"The lecture is full of little gems of rhetoric and soul till you can't rest."—[Daily Longfeltwant, Capetown, Africa.

"It is well worth the price of admission to see Mr. Nye sashay up and down the rostrum like a hen with her head cut off, and hold his audience at his own sweet will."—[Congressional Record.

"Last evening Bill Nye delivered his celebrated lecture here to a man whose name we could not learn. He was, no doubt, a stranger, but on coming forward, Mr. Nye offered to refund the man his money and spend the evening at poker. This morning Mr. Nye goes on to Boston $2,701 ahead, and his audience will walk back to Showhegan, where it is said he resides. Mr. Nye regards this as the greatest effort of his life. He cannot only convulse an audience with laughter, but he can rock it into a shoreless sea of gloom at the same price."—[The Sunday Christian.

"It was the most entertaining lecture I ever was to."—[O. Wilde.

"The lecture last evening was most enjoyable. Mr. Nye is one of the most entertaining lecturers now at large. Notwithstanding the fact that standing room could not be obtained at 7:45 last evening, the throng still pressed forward. Two people were fatally injured. Little hope is entertained of their recovery."—[The Daily Scud. [23ldeod&weowtf.

"After Mr. Nye's lecture last evening a petition signed by 2,701 of our citizens was handed the lecturer, asking him to name a date on which he would repeat the lecture here, and to give the committee sufficient notice, so that our people will have ample time to sell their property and move away.—[The Hired Man at Work.

Bill Nye's celebrated lecture was delivered at the Opera House last evening to a well-dressed audience. If it had continued an hour longer the audience would have remained cheerfully. Mr. Nye speaks easily with one hand in his pocket, and the other in the pocket of a total stranger. After each pathetic passage in the lecture ushers were sent around with Oriental tear jugs for the audience to weep in. Ample time is given for those who wish to shed the scalding tear throughout the lecture to do so, but people are cautioned against giving away to their grief sufficiently to sob the seats loose. The lecturer announced that he positively would not be responsible for tear-soaked and sob-shattered opera house furniture.—[The Sunday Morning Sausage.

Other press opinions will be added to the above as soon as I get time to write them. Parties in need of glowing press opinions for lecture or show business this winter will do well to address the subscriber, inclosing navy blue postal money order and unlicked postage stamp for reply.

Go hunting with you?

Certainly. A Saturday in the woods three or four times a year won't hurt a boy a bit. It is a good thing to know how to use fire-arms, but there are certain warnings which should never be forgotten or neglected.

1. Never point a fire-arm of any description at a person, unless you have made up your mind to kill him on the spot.

2. In the brush, carry your gun at a trail.

3. Never pull a gun toward you by the muzzle.

4. Never lean on your gun, even when the butt is resting securely on the earth.

I hunted all day once in company with a man who carried his rifle on his shoulder at full cock, so as to be ready if he sighted a deer. By some strange luck he didn't kill either me or the deer that day, but on the next he managed to shoot himself. A boy fifteen years old who has good horse sense, can be trusted with a gun. The only thing to be guarded against is his own carelessness. The idea that a gun is a dangerous affair to trifle with should always be present.

Where the Women Do Best.

The prevalent sentiment now seems to be in favor of economy in family and in personal expenses, in dress, in amusements, in journeying, and in sojourning at the seaside and at summer resorts generally. The leading causes for the change from lavish expenditure to moderate and sensible outlay are—first, that many people are not deriving as much income from trade and other business as was formerly the case; and second, strange to say, because it is the fashion. To quote a cant phrase of the day, it is "bad form" to be extravagant. The latter reason for prudence is enough, if there were no other. Fashion with many folks is irresistible. People, as a rule, do not like to be different from their neighbors, and fashion consists largely in doing what other people do. It costs a weary struggle to follow fashion when money is the measure. But it is a welcome relief to be prudent, when prudence is the fashion.

The control of the whole subject of living, considered as a matter of dollars and cents, is, after all, in the hands of citizens of the feminine gender. Woman's domain is the household. Here she (and, of course, she includes all competent women) should have, and here man should concede to her, "eminent domain." Every detail within doors should be under her absolute and undisputed control. If a wife here and there is not capable, of course things will not work well in that family. Exceptions, however, prove the rule, and there are very few women, indeed, to whom the responsibility is left who do not prove equal to it. He is the happy father, and they are the happy children, who do not know what they may have for breakfast till they sit down to the table, and who bring to dinner with them the source of good appetite, prepared in honest confidence to attack whatever may be set before them. Women do not direct the operations in the store, the office, or the workshop. They leave, or should leave, out-of-door operations to their husbands, and are, or should be, taken into his confidence. This is necessary, that there be no divided interests. The woman, in her turn, is entitled to the same freedom from interference in her household arrangements. Yet very seldom is this the case, even in what are called the "best regulated families." The man is the bread-winner, but the materials for the bake being provided, he should keep his hands out of the dough, and, if he is wise, will do so.

The keeper of a large retail store, an A No. 1 establishment, down town, was asked why he did not move away from a location which had long ceased to be surrounded by dwellings, and set up his establishment among the family residences of his customers. He said that he knew better than to do that. A man, he said, comes in here, sees what he thinks he wants, and wants the best. He leaves his order, and hurries away to consult the "ticker" or to meet an engagement. Nine times in ten he does not challenge the price, and ten times in ten does not remember it. The bill goes in to him in due season, and a check comes out from him. But where women do the buying there is questioning, and comparing, and testing, and reference to the last purchase, and inquiry why prices have risen, or why so much was asked the last time and so little is demanded now—and all the rest of it—all of which goes to show that a woman should make her own family purchases, even if she must walk a few squares to do it.

The beginning of household economy is in the purchase of what is wanted—just that and nothing else. Only the housekeeper knows what is necessary, and this knowledge seems to be incommunicable even to the wisest of men. Indeed, the wiser they are, the less they know of household matters. Such things are outside of their line. Give the woman the purse, let her manage, and ninety-five times in a hundred she will do it well. Never find fault with the table till she does, for if there is really any deficiency she knows it better than you do, and will be sure to speak of it, thus, by a flank movement, protecting herself.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Miss Jarbeau and Her Corn.

Miss Verona Jarbeau, who is considered one of the most fascinating burlesque artists upon the American stage, and who counts her admirers by legions, is said to be a victim to that acutest of physical tortures, corns. She wears an exceedingly small shoe, yet we are told that if her feet were free from the remorseless excrescences which keep her in constant martyrdom her shoes would be at least four sizes smaller than those she now wears. The young lady's affliction came about in a singular fashion. Three years ago, while spending the summer season at Newport, a jealous professional rival gave her a pair of Chinese bathing slippers, which Miss Jarbeau, suspecting no treachery, wore into the surf daily. It was subsequently discovered that these slippers were wrought of medicated pongee silk and the bark of a certain Chinese shrub or tree which is similar to the deadly upas, which exhales such fatal poisons. In a few weeks Miss Jarbeau began to experience severe pains in her feet, and these twinges did not subside till her shapely pedal extremities were literally covered with corns varying in size from the proportions of a nutmeg to the dimensions of a maiden's tear. Alarmed by these symptoms, Miss Jarbeau consulted famous chiropodists, only to learn that the malady was incurable; that once taken into the system the subtle Chinese poison could never be eradicated. Consequently this vivacious actress, who had never incased her tiny feet in wear larger than a ten-year-old child's shoe, was compelled to bravely face the necessity of making appearance in no 1's. The jealous professional rival who wrought all this misery did not long survive to enjoy the pain she had entailed upon another. By a singularly just dispensation of Providence she fell out of a three-story window and broke her neck last Michaelmas, that being the twenty-third anniversary of Miss Jarbeau's birth.

Cranks at Summer Resorts.

A correspondent of the Courier-Journal finds the following characters at Long Branch: The woman with the diamonds, who is "written up" by that awful scourge of modern society, the gossipy newspaper correspondent. The "write up" includes what she looks like, what she says, what she does, what her husband looks like, and why she married him; also her culture or lack of culture, an estimate of the jewels, when she wears them and where she bought them; speculation in regard to her age and domestic happiness, and reminiscences of people who knew her when she was poor, and don't like her and never did.

The young lady with the perfect figure and original bathing suit, who also enjoys the dubious felicity of figuring in the newspaper letters as to what the other women say of her.

The fat woman, who rolls about in the surf without shape or grace, and when out of the water and arrayed in her best, entertains her women friends by telling them how thin she was when she was a girl.

The five-hundred-thousand-dollar widower.

The dude who wears three suits of clothes a day.

The woman who is "talked about."

The woman President Arthur is engaged to.

The man who thinks he looks like the first Napoleon.

The woman who wears a $20,000 bracelet and is slyly reputed to be the wife of a gambler.

The banker's wife with 150 dresses and a limited supply of brains.

The young lady who swims divinely and stays in the water two hours.

The managing mother and the rich man's son who is engaged to the blonde heiress.

The woman whose dog always wears a ribbon to match her dress.

The extremely disagreeable man who thinks that he is fascinating and continually lurks around the parlors and verandas complimenting the ladies.

The repeated lord and his belongings.

The woman who wears discontent wrapped about her like a garment and tells how well off she was before she was married, and then pauses indefinitely with an eloquent sigh.

The man who wants to argue on religious topics all the time.

The fool who takes the vote of the house on the Presidential question.

The dreaded old man who talks about his diseases.

The woman who can't sing and continually tries.

The infirm old bachelor who brings his medicine to the table, and takes it in the presence of the other boarders, to the inevitable impairment of their appetites.

The forward boy who receives great consideration at the hands of the ladies because of the dearth of men, and forever puts on airs in consequence.

The impecunious bachelor who is looking for a rich wife.

The woman who quotes her husband, and has no opinion of her own whatever.

The woman who carries a volume of George Eliot about with her unremittingly, but is never caught reading it.

The widower who foolishly thinks he can make himself attractive by talking about his dead wife.

The man who dyes his hair and thinks nobody knows it.

The Fate of Marshal Ney.

The death of the Duke of Wellington enables [illegible] what may interest your readers [illegible] one can wish to recall the wretched last chapter of a life of romantic courage and consummate skill, nor the bitter controversy that followed the execution of Marshal Ney. His apparent want of judgment in repudiating the jurisdiction of the military court, of which four out of seven members were brother Marshals, and preferring the irresponsible Chamber of Peers, swayed by violent political passion, led him to his grave. The pathetic words of his chivalrous and sagacious advocate, Berryer, are not forgotten: "My poor friend, you would have it so!" The late Duke of Wellington twice told me that his father did his utmost privately to save the life of Marshal Ney; and that it was wholly in consequence of the absolute refusal of the King of France's Ministers to advise him to grant the Duke's request that he, as a matter of duty, abstained from publicly asking of Louis XVIII. this favor. The Duke gave me liberty to make this public after his death, and I think it right to do so. The late Quentin Dick, a member of the Parliament of Ireland and the United Kingdom, saw Marshal Ney shot, and related to me the facts. The Marshal was brought from the Luxembourg Palace in a fiacre, accompanied by a commissary and two sub-officers of police. He wore a dark-colored surtout, dark pantaloons, white neckcloth, and round hat with crape; he was in mourning for his father-in-law. On his leaving the coach the picket at the gate of the Luxembourg Gardens close by were beckoned to the spot: the men loaded and fired, the Marshal fell on his face and his body was replaced in the coach within three minutes of his quitting it—almost before the nurses and children, the only spectators, could assemble. The official account differs in some respects. The statement that the corpse remained for a quarter of an hour in a public highway bears its own contradiction. So unreal does the history seem that one cannot be surprised at the belief held by some that the man who bore a name very like Ney's who lived and died obscurely in North America, having exclaimed, on the death of the Duke of Reichstadt, "Then my last hope is gone," was the Prince of the Moskowa, spared secretly at the intercession of the Duke of Wellington.—Letter to the London Times.

AN INCIDENT OF 1840.

A Letter That Brought Tears to the Eyes of Daniel Webster.

Among the pleasing incidents of the log-cabin campaign of 1840, was one thus described by Representative Halsted, of New Jersey, says Ben. Perley Poore: At the recent Whig convention held at Worcester, Mass., the lady of Honest John Davis, the present Senator from that State, sent word to the committee of arrangements that she had nine beds in which she could accommodate nine Whig delegates, or, if they were good natured men, eighteen; and she invited forty or fifty of the delegates to dine with her. Having made all preparations for her invited guests, she repaired to the convention to hear the Whig orators. After the speaking was over she hurried home for the purpose of receiving her expected company; but she had scarcely reached her house before the sound of martial music saluted her ear. She approached the window, and there she saw drawn up before her door a band of 150 or 200 men, who sent a deputation to her to say that they would do themselves the honor of taking dinner with her. At this unexpected annunciation her woman's heart at first sank within her, but immediately the good, old genuine Whig spirit, which is always equal to any emergency, rallied, and by its recuperative energy at once restored her to her wonted composure. And what do you think she said? "Gentlemen," said she, "the string of my door is never pulled in. You are welcome to partake with me my log-cabin fare. Walk in, gentlemen." They did walk in, and she at once set about enlarging her tables and replenishing her board with provisions for this occasion of unexpected guests; and with that admirable management which is characteristic of Yankee as well as Jersey matrons, she was soon able to accommodate the whole of her guests, expected and unexpected, for they ate and were filled. How many baskets of fragments there were left I did not learn, but I suppose at least enough to supply all the poor in the neighborhood for a week to come. In her letter to her husband, this Bay State Whig matron said "that the wine and water, beer and hard cider, flowed in streams, and the way that Honest John Davis' wife's cakes disappeared was a caution." When Honest John received this letter, describing in those true and graphic colors which a woman's pen alone can give to such a scene, he was sitting in the Senate chamber, and as he read it "the big round tears coursed one another down his manly cheek;" and as he wiped them away he said to himself: "What a fool I am to be so affected." After he had perused the letter he handed it to Mr. Webster, saying: "There, Webster, you say you take pleasure in reading my wife's letters; read that." Webster took the letter, and, as he read, Honest John watched the workings of his noble features, and he soon saw the tear glistening in his large black eye, and then rolling down the bronzed cheek of this intellectual giant, and Honest John said to himself: "Well, I'm not so great a fool, neither." When Webster had finished reading he drew a long breath, grasped the hand of Honest John, and said: "Sir, it is the finest letter I ever read in my life."

The Sahara Sea.

If I mistake not, the surface of the Caspian Sea is fifteen feet more or less lower than the mean surface of the ocean. Then what becomes of the vast volume of water which pours into it from the Volga and other streams? The fact of its being so much lower than the ocean precludes any possibility of any subterraneous connection between the two bodies of water. Is it—the water—lost or kept to its level by the means of absorption?

The Mediterranean is measured, I believe, at something like fifteen inches lower than the Atlantic; there is always a strong current from the Atlantic into the Mediterranean; so much so or so strong that a strong easterly wind is necessary to enable sailing vessels to make the passage of the Straits of Gibralter. What becomes of the water? Why is it that there is no tide or are no tides in the Mediterranean?

Why do we have tides of great depth or height at some points, and only a few inches at other places?

It is proposed to create a new sea on the Sahara Desert. When such conversion is made, would not Fez and Air be submerged? Could the basin be filled in an ordinary lifetime without creating disastrous currents on the shores of Africa which might extend well toward midocean? To fill the basin, say in two years, more or less, would not the force of the water reduce the coast for miles, and form shoals which would render the new sea useless except for small craft? Would the filling of the desert with the ocean have any perceptible effect on the ocean system—that is, would the level of the sea be less than now? Would not the sand, which has been dry for so many years, absorb the water as fast as it might be let into the basin with safety to general ocean commerce.

In early life I followed the sea for a livelihood, and have heard the above-mentioned question, less the Sahara, discussed by able sailors and fair engineers, and not a few travelers with scientific and inquiring minds, but I have never yet heard a clear lucid or solid solution of the problem. In my visits among new and second-hand book-stalls for something which might possibly treat on the subject, I have failed to find anything which gives the required information.—New York Sun.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 6, ... 1884.

Mrs. Catharine Boyd was burned to a crisp at Salt Lake City last Saturday by the explosion of a coal oil lamp.

The suspension of the "Homer Index" is reported. Mono could spare two more papers; there are yet three in the county.

Work at Tybo, Nye county, Nevada, has been entirely suspended: nearly everybody has gone away, and it is expected that the place will soon be entirely adandoned.

Candelaria begins to have a more lively appearance than for many months past. The resumption of operations at the mines there, and preparations to start the mills at Belleville, are making employment for more men, and increase of business.

The report of Postmaster-General Hatton, shows a deficit in the postal department for the last fiscal year of $3,066,833 57, which he says was caused by the reduction of postage from three to two cents. Increased business will in time restore the service to a paying basis.

The rigors of military service press with great severity upon the German people. Herr Bebel, a member of the Reichstag, asserted that fourteen times more suicides occurred in the army than among the civil population. The Socialist papers publish the official statistics to show this is true. And all this suffering and despair to gratify the ambition or vanity of kings.

Steamboat Springs near Virginia City has long been a region of great interest. A party of United States surveyers are now making a thorough examinatton of the locality. The Virginia City Enterprise says. "A party from this city paid a visit to the quicksilver mine of J. B. Dazet & Co., and brought back with them many beautiful specimens. The cinnabar shown us is of excellent quality, and is procured quite near the surface. With proper apparatus this ore can undoubtedly be worked to a profit. It can be mined very cheaply, and the cost of extracting the metal from the ore should not be great, as there is in the vicinity an abundance of fuel.

Even now, at the active springs, cinnabar is to be seen in process of formation, but there the quanity is not so great as to the westward about the extinct springs where the ore was deposited in cooler ground. The whole tract appears to be filled with ores and minerals, and some of the deposits are undoubtedly of great value. There are large deposits of carbonate of copper in the same place where the quicksilver is found, and near at hand are large beds of sulphur."

Discouraging Mining.

The population of California has been very largely increased doring the past year, and several hundred immigrants are coming in every week still, wich no present prospect of the supply giving out. Yet none of these people are coming here to do any mining, although we have plenty of mining area to be developed. Of late years, however, the policy of the laws and the people seem to have been to discourage mining operations on every hand. Old California can scarcely realize this fact, which is nevertheless true. The State has produced, since gold was first found, over $1,200,000,000, and still, even under adverse circumstances, yields from $15,000,000 to $20,000,000 annually. It is estimated that $9000,000,000 come from our placers and hydraulic mines. The first are exhausted, and the latter are prevented from being worked by the decisions of the courts. It seems strange that an industry which has yielded so much solid and lasting wealth, and which still continues to produce, should not be encouraged.

Since the closing down of the mines hard times have existed all over the State. Thousands have been thrown out of employment and money is very scarce.

It is but just to say, however, that it is only the gold mines which have lessened their yield. We produce in this State a good many other things from mines. Quicksilver, iron, coal, sulphur, salt, borax, silver, antimony, plumbago, and many other substances are mined profitably. But on the whole, mining as an industry is rather frowned down. And this in a State that is world-renowned for its mineral wealth. Capital has been turned in other directions by this discouragement and sent to other regions where mining is more recognized.

It is as well for all our citizens to consider these things, and reflect if it would not be better to encourage all legitimate mining operations by word and deed. The money from a mine is not a mere exchange, like a good deal of our "business," but the yield is so much added to the world's wealth. It is substantial, and will stay with us. Outside of mining circles it is very difficult to find persons who will invest or even look for an investment in this industry. Yet this should not be so. Experience has proven mining to be a legitimate business, and one in which much wealth is to be attained when properly conducted. There are hundreds of mines now known, and hundreds yet to be found, which will yield rich returns. But as long as the present policy of discouragement prevails, the bullion yield of California will continue to be comparatively small.

The Great Bartholdi Statue.

Everybody has read something of the colossal statue, prepared by Mr. Bartholdi, of Paris, and presented by the republic of France to the United States. The following list of history and description, from an English paper, will no doubt prove interesting to many readers:—

The statue has had all sorts of vicissitudes. Its conception is due to the great French sculptor, Bartholdi, who has a passion for working on the colossal scale; but he and a few faithful friends had no little difficulty in persuading the public of two hemispheres that they were in want of this work. A Franco-American committee was formed in France with very influential names—M. Laboulaye, M. Oscar de Lafayette, M. de Rochambeau, M. Paul de Remusat, M. Waddington, etc.—and the Franco-American committee daly issued its proposals for subscriptions in France and in the United States. They were put in a very seductive form—the republic of France was to make this pretty gift to her elder sister of America. Everybody said it would be a good thing, but few put down the money. However, by dint of vigorous beating of the big drum of platform and press, by concerts and lectures and balls and fancy fairs, as well as by generous donations, the money was got together; and the statue of Liberty is now the most extraordinary work of its kind of all time.

The moment after the presentation the workmen will begin to take it to pieces for transport to America, where it will be riveted together again to stand for eternity. The dimensions are almost incredulously large. The figure alone in sheer height, clear of all reckoning for the coronet, stands 105 feet; the extreme length from the sole of the foot to the end of the torch in the outstretched hand is 137 feet 9 inches; the pedestal of granite will be 83 feet high, and the two together give a grand total of 220 feet for the entire work. The monument of Fish-street hill, the loftiest isolated column in the world, is but 202 feet high; while the far-famed Colossus of Rhodes stood only about 140 feet without his stockings. The work has been going on all these years, slowly but surely, at the copper foundry of Mondint et Cie, near the Pare Monceau, in a great workshop built specially for it. The further the coppersmiths advance with their task the more liliputian they become in relation to it. What were men, for instance, or the children of men, in that awful eye measuring thirty inches from corner to corner? A six-foot man standing on the level of the lips only just reached the eyebrow. While they were working on the crown of her head they seemed to be making a huge sugar cauldron; and they jumped with ease in and out of the tip of the nose. Fifteen people might sit round the flame of the torch, and they would reach that elevation by a spiral staircase within the outstretched arm.

The details of the construction are hardly less curious. Something light was wanted for transport to the other side of the globe, and something strong as well, to enable the statue to resist the wear and tear of the elements, for at Bedloe it will stand in a very exposed place. It was decided therefore to make it of plates of very thin copper—only an eight of an inch thick—forming an inner and an outer skin about a foot apart, and to fill the space between them with sand, especially toward the base, so as to give the statue the requisite solidity. The colossal statues of the past were either of solid metal, or were filled up with masonry or woodwork. It was impossible to adopt that plan in the present instance; the cost of the metal would have been too great and the difficulty of transporting insuperable. As it is, the small plates can be easily unriveted, packed on board ship, and riveted together again when they reach their destination. The sand can be as easily poured in or drawn off for repairs for any particular part. The two skins are to be kept in their places by a gigantic skeleton framework in iron, running four-square from the basement to the very crown of the head, exactly like the framework of a lift, and meant to serve that additional purpose when the statue reaches its destination. This solid iron frame is to be carried up into the extended arm, which has all along presented a mechanical problem of peculiar difficulty, its leverage with the weight of the torch being very great indeed. The framework, therefore, runs down almost to the center of the body and well below the center of gravity. Some people—and among them Mr. Story, the great American sculptor—think the statue will never stand, and that the winds and waves will play havoc with it. It is not solid enough, and never can be with its epidermis of mere copper and sand. If it could not be in solid metal, like the older works, it might have been in masonry or wood covered with copper plates. But this is a question for engineers rather than for artists, and the engineers are quite convinced that "Liberty" will resist the Atlantic storms.

A word should be said about the artistic merit of the statue, and this, in spite of its size, is very considerable. Bartholdi is used to working on a large scale, and he knows his craft. It is impossible, perhaps, in our day to make anything quite dignified of such a subject. The figure must pose, and pose theatrically; and some people have found fault with the stride and gesture. But the general merit is incontestable. The drapery is both massive and fine; some parts, where the sleeve falls under the right arm for instance, are as delicate and silky in effect as if they had been wrought with a fine chisel on the smallest scale, and in others the folds lie in great imposing masses. The face, again, while classic in general treatment, is not without expression. The most objectionable thing, perhaps, is the coronet branching out into star rays, each of which is to be a point of electric illumination for the universe, or at any rate for New York Bay.

The wages of a gang of Italian laborers near Saratoga were recently cut down ten cents a day. Instead of striking, they cut an inch off their shovel blades at night. The boss asked what it meant, and one of the men replied: "Not so much pay, not so much dirt lift; all right, job last the more long; Italian no fool like Irishman; he no strike."

The French began to bombard the arsenal at Foo Chow at 2 o'clock on Saturday afternoon. A dispatch announcing the firing of the first gun was received in Boston at 10:40 that morning, the difference in time being about eight hours.

FRANK HATTON.

Acting Postmaster-General and Probable Appointee.

The death of Judge Folger, late Secretary of the Treasury, has led to the appointment of Postmaster-General Gresham, to the vacant position, and the probability that Frank Hatton, First Assistant Postmaster-General, will be promoted to the chief office in the department. Under the law he is acting Postmaster-General for ten days from the date of Mr. Gresham's resignation.

Frank Hatton, of Iowa, has been First Assistant Postmaster-General since Oct 22, 1881. He was born at Cadiz, Ohio, in the year 1845. After receiving a good education, he was placed in his father's office, where he learned the business of printing. He fought on the Union side during the war. Upon his return from campaigning, he became a local editor on the staff of the newspaper owned by his father, at Cadiz, and afterwards at Mount Pleasant, Iowa. When his father died he became the proprietor and editor-in-chief of the journal long conducted by that gentleman. In 1874 he bought a half interest in the Burlington Hawkeye. It was not long before he owned the whole property, and by judicious business management, combined with superior editorial ability, had given it distinction both in State and National politics. Mr. Hatton is a loyal party man, and his services as a Republican manager have been greatly valued. He is an able public officer, whose promotion would be regarded with great satisfaction. The Postmaster-Generalship is an office worth $8,000 a year, and one which gives its incumbent a place in the Cabinet.

About Drinking.

As a matter of fact, there is nothing easier than to prove that hard drinking has been an essentially English habit since the dawn of our history. Shakespeare, who left off writing two hundred and seventy years ago, paints a whole gallery of tipical drunkards, and by the mouth of Iago claims the Englishman as far and away the most consummate toper in Europe.

In 1506, it is on record that Joyce Rowe, abbess of Rumsey, one of the wealthiest convents in the kingdom, and tenanted mostly by noble dames, was accused before Bishop Fox of carousing habitually far into the night with her nuns—a pretty strong proof that hard drinking was then a national vice.

Toward the end of the fourteenth century Chaucer represents all his low-class characters as jolly topers. The miller can hardly sit on his horse and the cook tumbles off into the mire, in consequence of their potations. The wife of the miller of Benay does not go to bed without "her jolly whistle well wet." In 1315 the noble dame, Clementina Guildford, abbess of Rumsey, the worthy predecessor of Joyce Rowe, drinks herself to death.

Some generations earlier the author of the romance of "Merlin" describes the mother of his hero—a highly respectable young woman—as accompanying her neighbors to the alehouse, swilling there till long past midnight, taking a lusty share in brawl, and then falling literally, as well as figuratively, into the claws of the demon—the whole thing taking place as quite a matter of course.

In the reign of Stephen comes Walter Map, the jovial archdeacon of Oxford, with his widely drinking popular songs. A century earlier the whole Saxon army spent the night before the battle of Hasting in pushing about the bowl.

And so we go back century by century; poets, annalists, statutes, and the canons of provincial councils all telling us that deep drinking was the rule all over Great Britain, up to the time when our ancestors could form no other ideas of heaven than as a place where fierce bouts of fighting and bouts as fierce of drinking were the only occupations and enjoyments.

In a paper communicated to the French Academy, M. Wroblewski refers to his investigations relative to the liquefying of oxygen, and the attempts to make use of the same as a refrigerating agent. This he found to be exceedingly difficult, owing to the necessity of using the liquefied oxygen in close vessels of great strength, and the very short duration of the ebullition. By means of a thermo-electric method there was obtained an approximate measurement of the temperature at which liquefied oxygen boils when the pressure is suddenly released—this being stated to be 302.8 degrees F. below zero, which is probably the lowest temperature ever recorded. After being compressed, the nitrogen was subjected to the action of this extraordinary cold, and, when allowed to expand a little, the nitrogen solidified, and fell like snow in large crystals.

A New Requirement in Modern Farming.

A good farmer always needed skill, but in the changed conditions of modern farming a different kind of skill is needed from that required by our fathers and grandfathers. This is more largely the case West than East, but true in both. Formerly it was mostly manual skill in the use of simple implements, such as the sickle, the scythe and the common walking-plough. Now the farmer needs to know how to adjust, run, and care for machinery. Machines properly handled call for little manual expertness to run them. But to manage the present implements requires a degree of mechanical skill that a large proportion of our farmers do not possess. To comprehend the full extent of this change, compare the modern threshing-machine with the old-fashioned flail, or the self-binding harvester with the old sickle, or its successor, the grain-cradle. Every careful observer must recognize the fact that the lack of skill in using and caring for his machinery, is one of the most potent sources of loss to the farmer. We have known one man to use a mower for ten years, without expending over thirty dollars in repairs—or three dollars annually—while his neighbor, in cutting a smaller quantity of grass used up three equally good machines in the same time. Compare the expenses of this one item: First farmer expended one hundred and thirty dollars, plus, say seventy dollars for interest—or two hundred in all—for ten years. This is just twenty dollars per annum; quite an item, you will say, for mowing-tools alone, but still much cheaper than mowing with the scythe. The other were out three machines, three hundred dollars, to which add repairs, say same as the other, thirty dollars, and interest on one hundred dollars for ten years, seventy dollars; on one hundred dollars (the second machine, for six years) forty-two dollars, and on another one hundred dollars (the third machine, for three years) twenty-one dollars, and you have a grand total of four hundred and sixty-three dollars—or forty-six dollars and thirty cents per annum—an annual expense of more than twice as much as the other. The same calculations concerning the harvester, the sulky-plough, the hay-rake, and other farm implements, make an enormous difference in the cost to a man who is unskillful in using and caring for them. An important inquiry is how the present difficulty can be remedied.—American Agriculturist.

A Wonderful Invention.

A great scheme is attracting some attention here, writes a Washington correspondent. That is a type-setting and manufacturing machine. Parties have been experimenting a long time on a machine which is designed to make type and set type at the same time. About $50,000 have been spent so far, and the machine has got just far enough along to suggest a reasonable hope of perfection. A stock company has been formed, and the work is to be pushed to early completion. In a conversation with Public Printer Rounds, the other day, on the subject, he expressed his belief in the ultimate success of the machine. Rounds is a practical man, a printer and type founder, and ought to know what he is talking about. "When it is done," said he, "a girl with sense enough to run a type-writer can set up as much as ten men can now, and make her own type as she goes along, too."

"What is to become of the jour printer?" I asked.

"The jour will soon have become unknown. But there will be work for him some way. I have noticed in my somewhat eventful life that every bit of machinery that helps the printing business, also helps labor by multiplying the production and demand."

The new machine is operated the same as a type-writer, except that a cast is not made of each letter separately, but of each word or line. It is very complicated and not easily described. A word or line is set—that is, a matrix of type is made in soft copper, and the full line cast at the stroke of the finger. It is already works fairly well, the thing most lacking being evenness of the faces as the type line appears. It is the opinion of experts that this wonderful machine will be successfully brought into action. If it does succeed it will revolutionize the printing business. It will be as great an advance as the steam-power press was over the hand press. The possibilities of such an invention are almost too great to contemplate, much less correctly estimate.

Hints Worth Remembering.

Fried tomatoes are a luxury: peel the tomatoes, cut in slices about half an inch thick, dip each slice into white flour, then into beaten egg, sprinkle pepper and salt over each slice, and fry in hot lard. These make a good garnish.

Another nice way to serve tomatoes is to stew them thoroughly, and they are improved by a slow and gentle simmering as much as any other vegetable. Season with butter, pepper and salt, and a little sugar. Line the dish in which they are to be poured with thin slices of nicely browned toast.

When you are about to make a cornstarch pudding, melt a lump of butter in the pudding kettle or pan, before putting the pudding into it. There will be then no danger of the milk becoming scorched, with ordinary care at least.

A very good way to use cold roast meat which you do not care to send to the table again in its original form, is to chop it very fine, season it with pepper and salt; if you have gravy also moisten it with that, but if you have not pour a little milk over the meat, and after putting it into a buttered pudding dish, put some little lumps of butter around on the top of it; then spread mashed potatoes over it all; wet this with milk and set the dish in the oven; when hot and browned nicely, serve it.

Novel breakfast cakes are made by taking some bread sponge which was started the night before, and mixing lukewarm water with it until it is like batter; add an egg or eggs to it in the proportion of three eggs to one quart of dough. This should then be allowed to stand close to the fire for an hour; have the griddle hot, grease it slightly with sweet lard, and fry a la pancakes.

Joaquin Miller: When there is no one waiting to welcome us in this world any more, then it is time to die.

Ripe tomatoes cut in slices and served with mayonnaise sauce are a delicious addition to a spring dinner.

Smashing the Mexican Treaty.

Events have transpired since the ratification of the treaty between the United States and Mexico, by the United States Senate, that are likely, and ought to, deter the House of Representatives from taking steps to carry it into effect. Great Britain has also entered the field and determined not to permit her trade there to be wrested from her. Her diplomacy is not equaled by that of any nation, and whenever an advantage can be secured in any quarter of the globe, where the prize is worth much, she is very likely to get her full share. Her treaty with Mexico, as announced by cable on the 16th of August, concedes her the most favored nation treatment in Mexico for five years beginning January, 1885. To secure this she is even willing to waive all present considerations of the claims of the English bond-holders and the payment of the convention debt. What, then, becomes of the supposed advantages of the United States in Mexico under our Reciprocity Treaty? Great Britain, under that "favored nation" clause, can send there free of duty the very goods in which we had hoped to gain a monopoly. The machinery and other manufactured goods which the Northern States desired to find a market for in the neighboring Republic will meet there, as they have done before, the cheaper goods from England, and we shall gain nothing. On the other hand, we shall lose from the treasury the amount of duties on sugar and other productions of Mexico without any corresponding advantage. The treaty will not, of course, benefit the consumers of Mexican goods in this country appreciably for several years, as the duty-paid goods will keep up the market price. And if England gets these privileges in conjunction with the United States, will not France and Germany also get them speedily? There is no reason why they should not. But even with the one great manufacturing country whose wares and fabrics are, as a rule, the cheapest in the world, competing with us in Mexico on an equal footing as to duties, the boasted advantages of our reciprocity treaty are not apparent.—*N. NO RETURN CERTIFICATE NEEDED. Ah Joy has gone, and did not ask for any return certificate; he went by his own line, suspended from a rafter at McEvoy's boarding house, Beveridge. Coroner Brady "sat on" all that remained of Ah Joy, and one witness testified: "I found him on a board, his blankets around him. One man helped me pack him on the mule." This was all the evidence taken, and the jury returned the following verdict: "As there is no further evidence in the case, we, the Coroner's jury, convened at Lone Pine, Inyo County, Cal., to examine into the cause of the death of a Chinaman, by name Ah Joy, conclude that said Chinaman came to his death by strangulaton, there being no other marks of violence to be found upon his person."

PROTECTION AGAINST FIRE.—Last Monday evening an experiment made in Hawthorne demonstrated the great value of Harden's hand grenade as a protection against fire. A large wooden structure was erected and filled with such material as wooden shavings tar, pitch and other things of an equally combustible kind. Fire was started, and the whole structure was enveloped in flames before any grenade thrown. The second grenade broken brought the fire under controul, two more completely extinguished it. These grenades can be used by a child, one of them broken in a room where fire is would save the building, and perhaps the lives of the occupants. These grenades are sold by the dozen. Knapp and Laws, Hawthorne, Nevada are agents.

MONEY TO BE MADE.— It is said that dull times are not known by the agents for the great publishing house of George Stinson & Co., of Portland Maine. The reason of this exceptional success is found in the fact that they always give the public that which is keenly appreciated and at prices that all can afford. At present we understand, their agents are doing wonderfully well on several new lines. They need many more agents in all parts of the country. Those who need profitable work should apply at once. Women do as well as men. Experience is not necessary, for Messrs. Stinson & Co. undertake to show all who are willing to work, not hard but earnestly, the path to large success. It should be remembered that an agent can do a handsome business without being away from home over night. Another advantage—it costs nothing to give the business a trial, and an agent can devote all his time, or only his spare moments to it. Stinson & Co. guarantee grand success to all those who engage and follow simple and plain directions that they give. We have not space to explain all here, but full particulars will be sent free to those who address the firm: their full address is given above.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE GRAND JURY.

The Grand Jury met at Independence last; the jury organized by electing James Shaw foreman. On motion the following committees were appointed: To visit County Hospital: N. C. Young, A. A. Cashbaugh, I. P. Rittgers. To examine jail, prisoners, and Sheriff's office: Barney Peeler, W. K. Miller. A. Parker. To examine offices and books of County Clerk and County Treasurer: A. K. Engley, Allen Mathck, William F. Matlack.

The last named committee reported as follows: "That we found the books kept in a neat and business-like manner, and, to the best of our judgment, correct." The committee to examine jail and Sheriff's office reported "That we found the jail in as good condition as could possibly be expected. That the Sheriff's office we found in a neat and orderly condition, and the books thereof well and neatly kept. That we found in said county jail one person in waiting to be transferred to Insane Asylum at Stockton. The committee to examine County Hospital reported as follows: That we found every department neat and clean, and in good condition. We found seven patients in said hospital, as comfortable as could be expected. A motion was made to employ an expert to examine books of County Clerk, Treasurer and Sheriff. The motion was rejected by a vote of eight to five. A motion was made and unanimously adopted, as follows: "That we recommend a dismissal of the case now pending against Frank Silva, on the ground that he being once tried already, and the jury having failed to agree, we do not believe that a jury of citizens of Inyo county can be found that would agree on the case."

The following motion was also adopted unanimously: "We would respectfully recommend to our Representatives in the State of California lately presented to them, asking for legislation to secure a reduction of the salaries of County officers of Inyo county. We consider the salaries of said county officers, as now fixed by law, to be excessive and far out of proportion to the present population and taxable property of the county."

All of which is respectfully submitted. JAMES SHAW, Foreman.

L. A. JAMES, Clerk.

Beveridge Items.

The miners of Beveridge District had a meeting last Monday and elected Thomas McDonough Recorder for the ensuing year. The former by-laws of the district were adopted, with the exception that the fees for recording claims and for certificates of work done, were reduced to one dollar each.

Laskey's mill is running on ore from the Keynot mine. The results are satisfactory to all concerned.

The new wheel and pans put in at the McDonough mill work well; the prospect for the mill is excellent. Some change is being made in the gearing that will increase the capacity of the mill, Hawthorne Items.

County Recorder Rice was busy yesterday recording the transfer from the United States Marshal to the Holmes Mining Company of the property of the Northern Belle Mining Company. This finally settles the big lawsuit.

Several deer have been killed in the mountains near Willow Creek during the past week. Alva Miller brought in a fine buck on Sunday, and, as it was his first deer, the young man's pride is pardonable.

Colonel Ellis passed through Hawthorne last Friday on his way home to Carson. He informed a reporter that the item published in the Bulliten of last week and credited to the Bodie Free Press was true in its most essential point—that is, that he had made a sale of some mining property. But instead of the Thanksgiving mine at Aurora, it was the Colonel's interest in the Lookout mine, in Sweetwater, that was sold. And, instead of New York parties having been the purchasers, A. Kilpatrick and other capitalists of Bodie are the lucky men. This is good news for our Sweetwater neighbors.

Lively Camp.

Hawthorne is the liveliest town on the line of the C. & C. railroad in Nevada. The Mount Corry and other mines in the vicinity are looking well, and many men are employed. Good substantial buildings are going up, and the town is rapidly acquiring the look of settled prosperity. There are business houses that do a very large business; the firm of Knapp & Laws supply goods over a very wide extent of country, and their connections are rapidly extending. Summerfield also does a large business in farm produce and general groceries. The town is well supplied with remarkably good hotels, the principal being the Lake View, and Nucleus. The view from the Main street is very fine, including the range of Mount Grant, and nearly the entire length of Walker lake, a beautiful body of water, twenty eight miles long. The lake contains plenty of fish, among them being trout, many of which are found to weigh fifteen pounds, and even more. At present there are vast numbers of ducks and other wild fowl upon the lake. Hawthorne is evidently destined to be and continue an inportant town.

RETURNED.—J. R. Eldred returned yesterday from a trip to the Saline country.

WANTS PRODUCE.—E. Summerfield, Hawthorne, wants butter, eggs, poultry, fish, fruit and game. Mr. Summerfield will pay the highest market value for all goods of the kinds named.

FOR SALE.—One good cook stove, one parlor stove, a nice lounge, two bed springs, one bedstead, one Singer sewing machine and other articles. Apply at the office of THE INYO INDEPENDENT.

COMPLAINTS.

Merchants at Hawthorne complain that farmers do not forward produce promptly. After agreeing to send eggs, butter or other goods at a certain time, and merchants making engagements to supply their customers, relying on the receipt of said goods for the fulfillment of such engagements, farmers will let days pass without sending the goods, causing loss of custom to the merchant. In all business transactions promptness is an absolute necessity. When a merchant engages to supply goods to a customer, and fails to do so, the customer will not be satisfied by being told that a farmer's horse was sick, or his wagon tire loose, or that some equally important matter hindered him from sending the goods. All along the line of the C. & C. railroad goods are received from the Sacramento valley, when similar articles of as good quality could easily be supplied in unlimited quantities from Owens valley. The rates of freight are much in favor of the Owens Valley farmer, the merchants are quite willing to pay as much, or even a little more, for their produce than for goods brought across the mountains. The reason of this is, that produce raised here can be delivered fresh and in much better condition generally. Population is steadily increasing along the line of the railroad; new mining camps are being opened up, making new markets, and increased demand for goods. By its nearness and fertility, Owens Valley has much advantage over any other region for supplying these markets, and if the farmers here fail to get and keep control of the markets it must be through some fault of their own. The lands on which produce is raised on the other side of the mountains, costs ten times as much as land in Owens Valley; freight costs twice as much as is charged for carrying goods, say from Bishop Creek to Hawthorne. These facts are notorious; every dweller in Owens Valley knows them. Farmers west of the mountains are prospering on the prices received for their produce to be shipped along the line of the C. and C. road With cheaper and equally productive land, with large advantage in freight, and with merchants ready to give their goods a preference, surely the farmers of Owens Valley ought to control these markets, and have fair compensation for their labor. It is now demonstrated that farming west of the mountains will not pay, if confined to wheat raising alone. There must be diversity of crops everywhere to make farms profitable. The times when hay could be sold in Owens Valley at forty to sixty dollars per ton have passed away forever. Butter, cheese, eggs, poultry, fruits, vegetables of all kinds; these can easily be produced all over the valley; these can always find a ready market, and must become the chief business of the farmer to produce. In connection with these productions, bacon and hams can also be made, and for these also there is always a ready market. There is much talk of dull times, but the truth is, that compared with other regions, Inyo county is today in a prosperous condition. This fact is very apparent when one goes away from home and makes inquiry as to the condition of business generally. In support of this assertion let the feat be repeated, that those at a much greater distance are very glad to send their productions to markets that could easily be better supplied from Inyo county. And again let it be said, that to keep control of the markets, merchants must not be disappointed when goods are promised. If delays and dle excuses are given instead of goods, merchants will be forced to go where there orders will be filled promptly.

ABOUT MEMORY.

A Passenger's Philosophical Remark on the Subject.

Dr. R. Wood Brown has lately advanced the following theory about memory: When an impression is received upon the retina, tympanum, fingers or olfactory bulbs, it is conveyed by proper nerve filaments to cells in the gray matter of the brain. These cells vibrate from excitation and undergo a change, say that of molecular arrangement. In this impression is repeated often enough the molecules are permanently changed, and we have memory cells and remember the impression. But repeated impressions are not always necessary to produce a memory cell. A sudden, violent excitation will cause a permanent change in a cell.

Dr. Allen Starr, in the Popular Science Monthly, says: If now, we take models of four brains, and on the first mark out the location of the various areas connected with the various sensory organs, as determined by the anatomical connection of the white nerve-threads; on the second mark out of location of the various areas which physiologists have shown to govern various sonsory organs; on the third mark out the various areas whose disease produces disturbance of action in the various sensory organs, and loss of memories of perceptions by those organs; and on the forth mark out the various areas which wither after diseases of the various sensory organs—we shall find that upon all four brains are areas belonging to any one organ coincide. We may therefore conclude that each class of momories has its own definite area of the gray matter on the surface of the brain. Memories of objects seen are located in the posterior parts in the occipital region. Memories of sounds heard are located in the lower lateral part in the temporal region. Memories of motions in the limbs and of touch in those limbs are located side by side in the central fatoral region. Memories of speech are located in the frontal region. It is therefore, a mistake to speak of memory as a single faculity of the mind. It is rarely an assemblage of distinct memories which we possess, each kind of memory being as different from the others, but in its nature and in its location, as are the different organs of sense through which the original perception came.

The Chicago Herald "Train Talker" alleges to have heard this on a Pullman sleeper.

"It's wonderful what practice will do for a man. Now, I have observed a peculiar thing on sleeping cars, which goes to show how even a common mind may be trained to perform almost incredible feats of memory and percision. On this car there are at least twenty gentlemen. While we are asleep the porter will gather up all our shoes and pumy 'em on a pile in the gents' wash room, where he will polish them when he gets time. There will be shoes that look just alike, and many of the same size, but in the morning every man of us will find his own shoes and nobody else's beneath his birth. Now, we all consider ourselves superior to that colored porter, but I venture to say none of us could do a thing like that. It's a wonderful example of what training will do for the memory."

Next morning, sure enough, every man's shoes were in their proper place, and the gentleman again called attention to what he considered so remarkable. "Here, porter," he exclaimed, slipping the grinning functionary a dollar note to loosen his tongue, "tell us how you do it?"

"Yes, sah," says the porter; "it's jus' as easy when you get 'customed to it, Takes a pow'ful sight o' practice, though."

"That's what I told you," remarked the gentleman to his companion, triumphantly.

"Yes, sah, it takes a pow'ful sight o' practice. It wah two hull weeks afo' I could learn to chalk the numbahs of de berfs on de soles of shoes without makin' mistakes. Thank ye, boss."

A Shakspearean Sentence Explained.

Back to Copenhagen. But never can a pen of mine describe the agonies of getting back. The State railroad of Denmark was unequal to the task of transporting 15,000 people, and the passengers had sometimes to wait two hours before getting a train, although they ran every fifteen minutes. Yet all were so patient and uncomplaining that it was a perfect revelation to an American. Not a word or murmer was heard from even women who stood with children on their arms. Meanwhile an American railroad, in the person of its accredited representatives, waxed wroth. "If we dare to do anything like this," said the European agent, "the people would mob us, and they would be right. This comes of centuries of endurence! They'd better import an American railway," and so on to the end of the chapter. It availed nothing. Completely fagged out we finally reached Copenhagen. On the way home I suddenly aroused from my lethargy. I smelt a smell. It was a strong smell. One that was richer than any of the hundred smells in Cologne, and stronger than any to be found in Naples. It comes from a Danish cheese store. They have very many cheese stores there, and each smell worse than the other. It brought back to memory Shakspeare's famous description of a Copenhagen cheese factory:

"Something is rotten in the State of Denmark."

This is the "something" referred to, and the description is quite correct.

While placing her daughter in school at Farmington, Connecticut, Mrs. Garfield registered as "Mrs. Brown" to avoid notoriety.

Anecdote of Longfellow.

Rev. John B. Kenyon gives in the Syracuse Christian Advocate an account of a visit to Mr. Longfellow in Cambridge in 1881, and among other anecdotes touching the great poet relates the following:

One day a knock was heard at the door, which Longfellow answered in person. The poet at once recognized his visitor, both by his accent and dress, as a western rustic. As his custom was, Mr. Longfellow invited the man to step in. Once fairly in the house the fellow gazed curiously around, and at last said:

"Is this the house that George Washington once occupied?"

Mr. Longfellow answered:

"It is."

"Well, by the way," said the rustic, "might I ask who the party is that occupies it at present?"

"Certainly," replied the poet; "my name is Longfellow."

"Longfellow, Longfellow," drawled "the sinew of the west." "You don't mean Henry W. Longfellow?"

"That is my name," answered the poet.

"Well, I vum," said the rustic, "that beats me. Why, I thought Henry W. Longfellow died before Washington was born."

The Ear-ring out of Date.

Women are beginning to abolish the ear-ring as one of their personal adornments, although it will take a long time to wholly banish this favorite but barbarous ornament. The recent aesthetic movement in dress, which introduced, along its absurdities, some truly sensible idea, has much to do in educating women to a better standing of taste regarding personal adornments. The most exclusively fashionable women do not wear ear-rings in the daytime, and only those with jewels or rare stones in the evening. Finally, they may be discarded altogether, and the money spent for diamonds in this direction will be invested in broaches, pendants and bracelets.

Tanned Faces.

Why do ladies object to having their faces tanned? The deep, rich crimson color is certainly very becoming and preferable to the pale, sickly look so common. The reason is not difficult to find. A tanned face is thought to belong to persons low in the social scale; in other words, to the vulgar. So women forego the good they might receive from sunshine, and acquire a complexion of a sickly pallor caused by organic decay, and call it beautiful. The practice of screening the body, and especially the face, from the sun on all occasions, is one which deserves to be severely condemned.

It is the Original Horse? New facts bearing upon the origin of the domestic horse are eagerly received, and much interest was aroused three years ago by the announcement by Przevalski, the great Russian explorer, that he had discovered in Central Asia a wild horse more closely allied to the domestic species than any other previously known. A full description of the new horse—known as Equs Przevalski—has only very recently been translated from the Russian. It appears that the animal is intermediate in many respects between the true horse and the asses. It has a short, erect mane, no forelock, and the hair of the tail do not extend the whole length of the tail, but only foom about the middle downward; while, on the other hand, it has broad hoofs and small ears. The color is whitish gray, white red or blackish legs. In herds of from five to fifteen each, the animals inhabit the driest and widest parts of the Dsungarian desert, and are very shy, It is pointed out by Mr. W. W. Watts that drawings made by the ancient Frence cave-dwellers very accurately represent this horse.

The transfer of photographic prints to glass, for painting or other purposes, may, it is found, be effected in a satistactory manner by separating the paper print from the back ground by steaming it, then drying thoroughly, and, having given the warmed glass an even coating of clean balsam or negative varnish, the face of the print is placed on tho surface thus prepared, After having smoothed this out, it is to stand in a cool place as long as will be required to harden the varnish. On this being accomplished, water is to be applied, and then, with a soft piece of gum rubber, the paper is rubbed off, so as to leave the photographic image on the varnished glass.

A woman doctor in Boston achieved notoriety by making a fatal blunder. She prepared a mixture containing strychnine for one of her patients, and in the directions for a dose on the label she wrote "spoonfuls" instead of "drops." In about an hour the patient was dead.

A writer says that "love makes young people frank and honest with each other." For instance, when he goes out between the acts he always frankly tells her that he merely wished to see a friend; and when he sees her promenading with a nice young man, she honestly explains that it was "only her cousin."

A Converted Bad Man's Funeral.

NEW YORK, September 22d.—Jerry McAuley's funeral from Broadway Tabernacle yesterday was attended by the most promiscuous assemblage ever witnessed within the walls of a church in this city. Bankers, merchants, wealthy ladies, clergymen of all denominations, prostitutes, thieves, pickpockets, black and white; in short, the Tabernacle was densely packed with people from fashionable quarters, and from the slums. The pall-bearers were six converted river thieves. Rev. Drs. Prime, Taylor, Watkins, Deems and other prominent clergymen officiated.

A nice pious young man, who tried to steal a kiss from a Washington belle, got his nose so covered with red paint that his pastor subsequently stopped him in the street and discoursed to him for ten minutes on the evils of strong drink.

THE GOLDEN GRAIN.

The grain! the grain! the beautiful grain!
How it laughs to the breeze with a glad refrain,
Blessing the famishing earth in her pain,
Making her smile with glee.

Lifting in praise each bright golden crown
As it drinks the dew the Father sends down,
Courting the sun's warm lover-like frown,
Returning it smilingly.

The grain! the grain! the beautiful sheaves!
A song of joy their rustling weaves,
For the gracious gift that the earth receives,
Given most royally.

From every hillside, every plain,
Comes the farmer's song as he reaps the grain;
And the gentle breeze wafts on the strain,
In wildest harmony.

He pours o'er the earth his brimming horn,
That the valley may laugh and sing with corn,
While hope from her death trance rises new born
The brighter day to see.

BLONDES TO ORDER.

A Popular Craze Among Foolish Watering-Place Belles.

Any one strolling along the beach about noon, says a Coney Island correspondent, when the fair ones are on parade, must notice the number of ladies of dark complexion wearing blonde hair of the very lightest shades. This anomaly is not the work of nature, as may be supposed by some, but of a small black vial labeled "Bleaching liquid," to be had of any druggist or hairdresser. One of the largest wholesale dealers in bleaching preparations in this country is stopping here, and a talk with him today revealed many interesting points on the subject of bleaching.

"The price of the stuff," said he, "is $1 a bottle, and it requires three or four applications daily for a week or so to do its work. All bleaching preparations are perfectly harmless, so much so that they can be drunk with the utmost safety. The only instruction that need be given to the person using it is the manner of application. For instance, a very dark brunette must use at least three vials, or, say, a pint of the liquid, while a person of medium complexion requires much less. In warm, sunny weather the change is more complete and satisfactory. The application is made after each meal and then allowed to dry in the sun, or near a hot stove if it happens to be bad weather. The change is made in degrees and can readily be extinguished as it progresses. The application proves futile in very few cases.

"When did the craze begin?"

"Only a year or so ago. It was started by the ladies in the upper circle and then followed by store and factory girls."

"What is the cost of the operation?"

"Not more than $5, if performed by the lady bleaching. If, however, she goes to an aristocratic hair artist, the expenses will foot up $50 or $75, and the bleach will not be any better than that done by herself, provided, of course, she follows instructions."

"In your experience, do you think bleaching beautifies the ladies?"

"That is the most remarkable thing about the whole affair. Nine out of every ten ladies who have purchased the liquid of me came into my store very fair-looking brunettes and when I saw them after the bleaching some of them looked positively ugly. Indeed, one of the younger ladies told me she knew she had tampered with whatever beauty she possessed, but she did not care, so long as she was in the fashion."

"Do they ever try to bleach the eyebrows and lashes?"

"Yes; but they never succeed."

"How long does the bleaching last?"

"Bleached hair never resumes its natural color—at least, not in many years, but as fast as the hair grows the liquid must be kept applied, otherwise a part of the hair will be light and that about the roots dark, just the same as with a man who dies his mustache."—Baltimore American.

Carpet Beating.

We have no wish to decry this periodic purification, but merely to point out rules for its better conduct and efficiency. The usual process in households which cannot afford to have it carried out by special agency is first to take up the carpets and sweep the walls and ceilings, and then wash the floors. While the latter are drying, work must be found for the idle hands, and they cannot be better employed than in beating the carpets in the courtyard or back garden, a work attended with a horrid din and clouds of dust. It will be unavailing, we know, to complain of the noise—no appeal in this direction will gain a moment's sympathy; but we hope more attention will be paid to the other nuisance. When we reflect on the nature of the dust thus raised, we are surprised that sane persons allow to be thus stirred up under their noses all the nauseous accumulations of dining-room, bedroom, and stair carpets, to say nothing of door mats, etc., into a fine dust, and which, thus dispersed, finds its way again into our houses in a form most readily accessible to our respiratory organs. Indeed, it is fortunate if the dust thus roused is only nauseous and not effective, since the desquamated cuticle of scarlet fever, the scabs of smallpox, the dried sputa of consumptive or whooping-cough patients, living parasites, and hairs from mangy cats and dogs may thus invade our rooms. Carpet-beating, we are aware, is forbidden in public thoroughfares; but it should in any form be prohibited within a reasonable distance of dwelling-houses; and for those who cannot afford to pay the small sum required to have their carpets and mats properly cleaned, the authorities should set aside some open space, to which, on stated days, and at certain hours, persons might bring their carpets and have them beaten, without causing annoyance or danger to themselves or neighbors.

Beautiful Eyes.

"And such beautiful eyes!" said Harvey Lee. "Brown as a ripe chestnut and clear as diamonds."

"Not half so beautiful as Minnie's eyes."

It was Aunt Florence who said this in her firm but quiet way.

"Minnie's eyes!" exclaimed Harvey, with just a little contempt in his voice. "Why, they are as pale and dull as a faded violet. And such thin lashes and eyebrows! You're jesting, Aunt Florence."

"No," was the steady answer. "I speak as I think."

"But, aunt," urged Harvey, "just look at the difference between them. Mary's eyes are large, clear, brilliant, brown eyes, with long, silken lashes that fall like heavy fringes on her cheeks; while Minnie's are small, dull, and expressionless."

"Not expressionless," objected Aunt Florence. "I have seen a life and beauty in them to which I fear the eyes of Mary Leonard are strangers.'

As Aunt Florence spoke, a young girl, with a finely-formed oval face, and regular features, crossed the room and joined the little group, a part of whose conversation we have just given. Her eyes were, as Harvey Lee had described them, "brown as ripe chestnuts and clear as diamonds." He was not alone in calling them beautiful.

"Did you ever see such horrid taste?" exclaimed the girl, glancing toward a young lady, who had just entered the room. "And what a fright Clara Jones has made of herself with that great knot of hair, when everybody knows she hasn't any of her own worth naming!"

Aunt Florence gave Harvey a meaning glance. Somehow, the eyes of Mary Leonard seemed to grow less beautiful as he looked at them. Their fine lustre was dimmed.

Mary lingered for a minute or two, looking keenly around in search of flaws and defects, and then crossed to another part of the room.

"A beautiful spirit will make the eyes beautiful," said Aunt Florence, in a low voice, bending to the ear of her nephew.

Harvey did not reply, but he had a faint glimpse of her meaning. A little while afterward he found himself standing by the side of Mary. He was about the same age—sixteen—but she seemed much older. His heart fluttered a little, for her great lustrous eyes had charmed and bewildered him. Looking into her face, that seemed to him at the moment all loveliness, he asked a simple question in order to lead her into conversation. But, in her heart, Mary looked down on the boy with a feeling that was half contempt, and she took no pains to hide this feeling. She answered him in a few coldly-uttered words, with changing eyes, and a slight shade of scorn on her lips.

In an instant she stood transformed before the boy. It seemed as if a veil had fallen from before her face. Something that was almost hideous looked out at him from the large brown eyes. Their beauty faded in a moment. He half caught his breath in sudden surprise; then turned and walked away to a distant part of the room.

"How sweet she is!" This sentence fell upon the boy's ears, and he turned to look at the speaker. It was Minnie Loring. Her pale blue eyes were resting on Clara Jones, who, as seen by Mary Leonard, was a fright. What a wonderful change had come into those eyes, which, a little while before, he had called dull and expressionless! They were full of light, and had a beauty that seemed caught from Heaven, it was so tender and loving; for her beautiful soul was looking out through them.

"Beautiful eyes, my dear boy," said Aunt Florence, a little while afterward, when he told her of what he had seen, "are those that reveal a beautiful soul within—eyes that are ever searching for the beautiful in character, in persons, and in nature. Such eyes are Minnie Loring's. They have not the native lustre, the rich coloring, and splendid setting of Mary Leonard's; but when each becomes flooded with feeling, the eyes of Minnie are radiant with sweet affections, while Mary's are too often dimmed by ill-nature and selfishness. No eyes are really beautiful but those that reveal a beautiful spirit."—Kate Sutherland, in Arthur's Home Magazine.

"Is there a left-handed barber in this shop?" asked a man as he walked into a tonsorial establishment on Grand Avenue early in the week.

"We have one, sir. Take a chair."

A reporter watched the strange customer as the left-handed knight of the brush scraped his chin, but could not discover anything different from the manipulation of a right-handed man, but there was just the same, and here it is:—

"You see," said the boss barber, "when a man is shaved all the time by a right-handed barber, the beard is pushed over toward the right, and when it grows out it looks like a lopsided map. The left-handed barber counteracts this tendency, and the roots are directed the way they should go. A left-handed barber is a new wrinkle, but he is a good thing to have in the house."

Yesterday two blacksmiths were conversing in a south-side saloon on the relative abilities of two helpers.

"Jim is a good enough man," said one, but he can't use his left hand."

"You see," said the speaker in response to the reporter's query, "blacksmith's helpers have to stand on both sides of the forge, and while one strikes right-handed, the other hits with the left. If a man can't hit straight with his left he's no good."—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Mrs. Jenks was reading of two young city experts who were going to the Adirondacks fly fishing, when she muttered: "The senseless dudes! If they only knew it, a teaspoonful of molasses and vinegar on a pane of glass would catch more flies at home than they'll catch in the mountains all summer."

A Trick on a Spider.

A great many years ago, a prisoner of state, who was allowed to cheer the solitude of his dungeon by playing on his flute, discovered, after a while, that every time he played a great number of spiders gathered about him. Since then the liking of spiders for music has been proven. I myself had often wished to play for a spider audience, but I was not well enough acquainted with any musical instrument to coax a tune out of it.

A scientific gentleman of Europe gave me a valuable hint by an experiment of his own. He used a tuning-fork. Now, I can play a tuning-fork as well as anybody. I procured a tuning-fork, and then sought out a spider. I found a handsome, brand-new web, and though I did not see Mistress Epeira, I knew she must be at home. Epeira diadema is her full name, though most people call her a garden spider. It is she who makes those beautiful, wheel-like webs which festoon the rosebushes and trees.

As I have said, Madame Spider was not visible. I knew, however, she must be in her gossamer parlor, which is attached to her web.

Here was a good chance to try tuning-fork music. I rapped the fork on a stone, and in a moment a soft, melodious hum filled the air. I touched one of the spokes of the web with the fork. On the instant, Madame flew out of her parlor in great haste, hesitated a moment at the outer edge of the web, and then, instead of going straight to the tuning-fork, ran to the very center of the web.

When there, she quickly caught hold of each of the spokes, one after the other, and gave it a little tug, as a boy does his fishing-line to see if a fish is hooked. Each was passed by until she came to the spoke upon which the humming fork rested. There she stopped, and it was easy to see that she was excited. She gave the whole web a shake; then tugged at the spoke again. "Hum-m-m" still sang the fork, rather faintly now, however.

Madame was satisfied. Her mind was made up. Down she darted and caught the end of the fork in her arms. She tried to bite into the hard metal, and at the same time she spun a web of silk around and around the two prongs, which by this time had ceased vibrating.

I pulled the fork away, and Madame Epeira retired in disappointment to the center of the web. But if she was disappointed, so was I, for I was satisfied that it was not the music of the fork that had attracted her. Unfortunately, it was altogether too probable that she mistook the hum of the fork for the buzz of a fly—a sort of music no doubt very sweet to her.

Time after time I repeated the experiment with the fork, touching in turn each spoke of the web, and each time Madame Spider was deluded into trying to capture the tuning fork. It was odd that she did not learn wisdom by repeated disappointment.—St. Nicholas.

"Tough" and "Limpy."

"Jimmy Tough" is probably the most widely known of the news boys. He is about a yard high, is extremely careless about his personal appearance, has a very, very roguish eye, and is a great gambler. He crossed Fifth Avenue yesterday to where "Limpy" McMahon stood, in front of Tony Newell's, and with a bluffing swagger said:—

"I ken beat you runnin' for a nickle, 'Limpy.'"

"Limpy," who travels with the aid of a crutch, meekly responded: "Umph! anybody kin do that."

"Well, if you want to gamble," said "Toughy," "I'll bet I kin sit on one o' them cakes o' ice longer'n you kin."

"Limpy" felt about in the uttermost recesses of his pocket and gathered together five pennies, and, without saying a word, handed them to one of several bystanders who had become interested. "Toughy" followed his action, and each gravely sat down upon a cake of ice which lay upon the sidewalk.

The stakeholder took out his watch. For five minutes they sat there; and then "Toughy" began to squirm. He complained that his "pants" were not what they should be, and that he was therefore at a disadvantage. At five minutes and a half he could stand the chill no longer, and jumped up and ran across the street, crying that the ice was burning. "Limpy" sat still 30 seconds longer, and captured the dime.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

A New Editor's Opinions.

The Baptist Weekly, under the heading of a "new editor's opinions," gives the following summary of the pecuniary result of human energy in different departments of life:—

"The poet laureate can take a worthless sheet of paper and by writing a poem on it, make it worth $65,000; that's genius. Vanderbilt can write a few words on a sheet of paper and make it worth $5,000,000; that's capital. The United States can take an ounce and a quarter of gold and stamp upon it an "eagle bird," and make it worth 20 dollars; that's money. The mechanic can take the material worth 5 dollars and make it into a watch worth 100 dollars; that's skill. The merchant can take an article worth 25 cents and sell it for 1 dollar; that's business. A lady can purchase a very comfortable bonnet for 10 dollars, but she prefers to pay 100 dollars; that's foolishness. The ditch digger works ten hours a day and shovels out three or four tons of earth for 2 dollars; that's labor. A member of a relief committee works the whole side of his head off, impairs his mind, gets his nerves all out of whack, dreams all sort of dreams, is insulted on every corner, and mismamed by every booby, and—that's a fact!"

"Did it fall on the buttered side?" asked the landlady of the boarder who dropped a slice of bread on the floor. Without looking at the fallen piece the cruel young man replied, "Certainly not; such an event would be impossible in this house when oleomargerine is so cheap."

The Whale.

Since it lives in the water, the whale ought to be a fish, but it is not. It has the general external appearance of a fish, but that is all. The fish is cold-blooded and can breathe under water, while the whale is warm-blooded, and can no more breathe under water than you or I can; it must put its nostrils out of water and let out the used-up air from its lungs and take in good air again precisely the same as a man. Of course it takes in a very large supply of air, because it sometimes remains under water as long as an hour. Sailors speak of the whale as spouting, and in pictures the animal is shown usually with two fountains playing out of the top of its head. That is a mistake, for whales do not spout any water at all. What seems something like water is in reality only the hot breath rising in the frosty air, and condensing just as your own breath will in winter. Sometimes, too, the whale begins to breathe before its head is out of water, and then, of course, some water is forced up into the air.

Some whales are no larger than a man, and some are eighty feet long. The head of a big whale is a great deal bigger than an elephant. Even Jumbo would have to climb up a step-ladder to look over the head of a large whale. But, large as they are, they are terribly active, as many a hapless whaler knows, and forty-five miles an hour in tow of one of these monsters has sometimes been experienced. The tail is the usual weapon of the whale, and the only one of the whalebone whale, though the sperm whale has a formidable set of teeth in a very large mouth, and can do a very great deal of damage when disposed to bite a boat in twain. Several times, too, it has happened that a whale has used its head against a ship as a battering-ram. The ship has usually been crushed in and sank.

The whale oil is obtained by boiling down the immense layer of fat which incases the whole body of the whale, and a good whale has been known to yield from the blubber alone one hundred barrels of oil. And besides this, in the sperm whale there are always several barrels of oil in a liquid form which has only to be dipped out by the bucketful. The whalebone, as it is generally called, is not really the bone of the whale, but is a strange substitute for teeth which some whales have. It grows from each side of the upper jaw along the gums, and is some six feet or more long. The lower ends are frayed out like fringe, and are used by the whale to strain water through. It swims through the water with its huge mouth wide open, taking in jelly-fish, and anything else that comes in its way. By and by it closes down the whalebone—or baleen, as it is called—and forces the water out of its mouth, leaving the jelly-fish and other objects caught in the fringe. The whale then eats at its leisure.

Dolphins, porpoises, narwals, and grampuses are all members of the whale family, so that one does not need to go to the Arctic Ocean to see a whale, for it is a common enough sight to see a school of porpoises playing about in any of our harbors. In times past the porpoise used to be eaten, and was considered good food enough for even the royal table. Bluff King Hal, who looks in his portraits as if he knew what good living was, did not disdain porpoise meat with mint sauce. What is known as porpoise leather, however, is really made from the hide of the beluga, or white whale.

Most of the whales are peaceful in disposition, and the large Greenland, and sperm whales particularly, are not usually disposed to be vicious; but some of the smaller whales are frequently on the war-path, and can be very dangerous to even man. This is strikingly the case with the orca, or killer, as it is sometimes called. It goes in schools like the porpoise and dolphin, but in fewer numbers, and will attack any living thing that comes in its way, being, if possible, more ravenous and bloodthirsty than the shark. Even the great Greenland whale, with its eighty feet of length, fears the active little killer with its eighteen or twenty feet of length, and with good reason, for when a pack of these sea-hounds start in pursuit of the leviathan, they never cease until they have killed it. They swim around the great whale and under it; they leap far out of water, and, coming head first on the broad back, snatch great mouthfuls of flesh from it; and when the worried monster opens its cavernous mouth in the vain hope of engulfing some of its tormentors, they absolutely run in and carry off mouthfuls of the huge tongue. The killer is the terror of the ocean, more feared by the denizens of the water than any other creature.

At one time the large whales were quite plentiful, but years of vigorous pursuit by man have so thinned their numbers that comparatively few were to be found ten years ago. It is probable that if the large production of petroleum had not come to the rescue of the poor whale, it would by this time have been exhausted. As it is, it has had a respite for ten or twenty years, and now it has increased so greatly in numbers that once more whaling bids fair to become an industry along our northeastern coast.

A thin man wearing eyeglasses entered a Harlem restaurant a few days ago and asked:

"Have you any beans?"

"Yes, sir."

"Round, fat beans?"

"Yes, sir."

"With a brown crust on them?"

"Yes, sir."

"I'll take a plate."

"Ere Billy," shouted the proprietor through a hole in the wall. "Tell your mother to dish h'up some beans from the black pot. 'Ere's a hepicure from Bosting.

They came very near securing a downeast schoolma'am to teach a little school in Kansas, but when the committee told her that it was on the "bare prairie," she screamed and said she couldn't think of going to such an immodest place.

The British Museum.

The British Museum, though it is kept within two narrow bounds by a jealous Treasury, is ever on the watch, and, as this report shows, is ever acquiring books, prints, antiquities, manuscripts. Of books no less than 6,000 volumes were added to the library during the year; alarming evidence of the quantity, if not of the quality, of work produced by modern men of letters. Some of the old books purchased were of exceptional interest, such as the copy of Caxton's "Chronicles of Englande," of which only four perfect examplet are known; and the Leipsic reprint of Luther's Bible, printed by "that knave Wolrab, who," the great Reformer complained, "having printed all the libelous attacks on me, has now taken upon him to print my German Bible, and thus to take the bread out of the mouths of my own people at Wittenberg." The Luther celebration brought many other contemporary documents into the market, of which the museum acquired 120. The first of the sixty editions of Recker's Arithmetic also found its way to the library, dated 1664. So did many fine missals, breviaries and books printed by Verard, the great Paris printer; many of the best examples of binding from the Didot sale, and not a few from the lesser portions of the Sunderland and Beckford libraries. Though chill penury repressed the noble rage of the trustees in the matter of the Ashburnham collection, they yet secured 996 manuscripts, all of the highest value, from the "Stowe" division, of which they retain 991, having sent the rest to Dublin. The print department has been to a great extent rearranged under its new chief and numerous additions have been made to it, notably the excessively rare set of six plates of the "Triumphs of Petrarch," bought at a very high price at the Sunderland Library sale. In the various departments of antiquities much space has been gained and a very thorough organization rendered possible, while of the multitudinous additions, purchased or presented, one that is especially worthy of notice is the collection excavated from the barrow at Taplow, of which so much was heard last year. This has been given to the museum by the Rector of Taplow, the Rev. Charles Whately.

A Ship Canal.

One of the wonders of marine engineering is the ship canal through the Finland Bay from St. Petersburg to Cronstadt, in Russia. The bay between the two cities is so shallow that formerly only vessels of very light draft could come to St. Petersburg; and, in consequence, an enormous amount of lighterage was necessary, the cost of which, some five million dollars annually, became altogether too burdensome for the St. Petersburg trade. Since the completion of the canal mentioned, the largest vessel employed in the Baltic trade can reach St. Petersburg. The canal is seventeen miles long, and is formed by two enormous breakwaters, running parallel to each other 275 feet apart. Between them, a channel of the uniform depth of twenty-two feet has been dredged. About half-way between the two cities, the canal is widened to a harbor of refuge about one mile square, also formed by breakwaters. The latter are almost entirely constructed of cribs filled with stone, which were generally sunk in winter time when the bay was frozen over solid. The cribs were mostly built on the ice, which was as much as three feet thick, and sunk through holes cut in the ice. This work was by no means free from danger; for, frequently, the water would suddenly rise through the hole made and flood the camp of the laborers, who had then to work standing knee-deep in freezing cold water. At other times, a sudden snow-storm, in which it was impossible to stand erect, would force the laborers to seek the coast, crawling a distance of three miles or more over the ice. To complete the canal it was necessary to sink about 1,000,000 cubic feet of rocks and stones; while, to deepen the channel, 230,000,000 cubic feet of earth had to be removed. Of course, such an undertaking was possible only in Russia, and at the time when her population was still largely made up of serfs, whose labor could be had for the cost of board and clothing.—Jewish Messenger.

From a Bootblack to a Lord.

Sir John Macdonald, the present Premier of Canada, is said to have started in life as a bootblack in Glasgow. He emigrated to Canada at an early age. When only 18 the daughter of a wealthy Canadian fell in love with him and he ran away with her to a clergyman, who consented to marry them. The bride's father, after a time, forgave the escapade and started him in business. Thence he drifted into politics and displayed so much shrewdness and tact that in a short time he was a leading member of the Ministerial party in the Dominion Parliament. His chief opponent is the member from St. John's, Mr. Blake. In passing through Ottawa last week Sir John received a perfect ovation from the inhabitants. A wooden arch spanning the street bore these words, "Welcome to the friend of Canada and the enemy of our tyrant." Sir John's personal resemblance to the late Earl of Beaconsfield is so great that when he was in London he was not infrequently taken for him."—Philadelphia Press.

"Why," he pleaded, "our very circumstances bind us together; our similar tastes, our friendship, long acquaintance—" "Yes," she replied, "even age could bind us together." "What age, dearest?" he asked. "Mucilage," answered she, gluemily. A minute later, as he paste up and down the room alone, he realized that his failure was gumplete.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.:
SATURDAY, DECEMBER 13,..... 1884

EMMERSON, who in defense of Mr. De Young, shot Spreckles, has been discharged from custody.

AS A Republican will be elected to succeed Mr. Farley in the United States Senate, he is suggested for an appointment in the Cabinet of Mr. Cleveland as Secretary of the Interior.

MR. HENDRICKS is receiving snubs from all directions. While the ticket was a tadpole the tail was a very important part; now that it is a fully developed frog, it despises a tail as a useless appendage.

THE Call reports two white children in San Francisco afflicted with leprosy. The children suffer great pain; their mother says they caught the disease from another white child, a neighbor, who is also afflicted with the dread disease.

FROM various sources assurances are given that Mr. Cleveland, when he goes into office, will not be in a hurry to make any great and sweeping changes. Being a man of qualities more solid than brilliant his official career is likely to be prudent and careful.

A NEW mill is nearly completed at Kinkead, close to the railroad, near Hawthorne. John Moss is taking ore from a mine near the mill, and has a large quantity in readiness for milling. A switch is run from the main line to the mill, and the place has quite an air of business already.

THE Coroner-elect of San Francisco says he will have the law for the disinterment of the dead strictly enforced. This has raised a sort of panic among the Chinese, and they are digging up their dead by hundreds to have the remains shipped to China. The scene in the graveyard is described as shocking.

BELLEVILLE already begins to have an improved appearance, consequent upon preparations for starting up the mills, where quite a number of men are already at work. Nothing has yet been done in the way of removing the many piles of old cars and other rubbish that give the town such a dreary and unsightly aspect. Perhaps this will be in the sweet by and by.

WITH a view to increase the usefulness of the public schools the State Superintendent of Public Schools makes the following suggestions.

There is a belief that the system of public instruction is defective, in that it does not teach a use of the ordinary tools of mechanics. It is certain that, owing to certain causes, nearly the whole of childhood and youth is taken up in the schools, and there is not time even if there were opportunity, to learn the use of tools and the habit of labor.

The proposition to teach industrial education in all the public schools is clearly impracticable. We have a vast corps of instructors fitted, by long and costly training and by experience, to serve the public; most of them—the large majority—are ladies, and are in charge of district schools, where they are alone without assistance. Does anyone expect these hard-worked ladies to teach carpentry, blacksmithing, agriculture?

No; if this demand is to be met, it must be by special schools, which might be called Work Schools, which would have in charge to give instruction in work which, however limited in extent, would be good and sound.

To this end I would suggest that a sufficient appropriation be made to set up the necessary buildings and plant, and to purchase the necessary land at some one place at or near the county seat of every county. This to be done by the State; and the money distributed to the counties in proportion to the number of school census children in the county. Then let the fund for paying the salaries of the instructors be raised by a county tax.

There should be land enough upon which to teach practical agriculture, including orchards, vineyards, and silk culture, at least to the extent of the production of cocoons.

The report suggests that instruction should be given in working wood, metals, leather, and in cooking and housekeeping, and continues:

Thus there would be one place in each county where the use of tools might be learned, and even a useful, self-supporting trade acquired, and also the great moral results achieved of self-reliance and a respect for labor.

Since these work schools would form a part of the public schools, the pupils would see that labor, the continued practice of labor, was necessary, desirable and honorable, and was held so to be by the body politic.

One of the most valuable but least attended departments of the State University is that of Agriculture and Mechanic's arts. If the "Work School" suggested by Mr. Welcker should be established the graduates of this department might become valuable teachers in these schools. The adoption of the schools might demand an increase of taxation for school purposes, but the amount could be easily obtained, in some counties at least, by a wise economy in expenditure of public money in other directions. Tax-payers would not so much regret the payment of heavy taxes if their children were receiving the benefit of the same.

Report of the State Mineralogist.

A copy of the annual report of the State Mineralogist has been received. The report is very full and contains a great deal of valuable information on the State of California. This information is not confined to mining alone, but includes farming and fruit raising; description of the mountains and valleys, the water system of the State, the productions of the different localities and much else of general interest. Of course mining and mineralogy are treated at greater length than other subjects and on these the report is very elaborate. Especial mention is made in several parts of the Report of the mining interests of Inyo county. Among other minerals found in Inyo is Anglesite, a natural sulphate of lead, called also "lead vitriol;" this contains 73.6 per cent. oxide of lead. The report says it is a rather common mineral in California, and exceptionally so at the Cerro Gordo mines, Inyo county, where it assumes a compact form unlike any described variety found elsewhere. These deposits have been extensively mined for lead and silver; and although the shafts have attained considerable depth, no water has been met with, even in the lowest workings. Anglesite in California is a valuable and abundant ore of lead, often very rich in silver, and always carrying a notable portion of that metal. It is found at the Modoc mine; with Galena at the Cerro Gordo mines; with Argentiferous Galena at the Santa Maria mine; and at the Eclipse mine in the same county with Azurite and Galena. Onyx marble is also found in Inyo, at Cerro Gordo. This is not only a rare mineral, but it is not apt to be found in large quanities in any one place. A mantle peace made onyx sells redily for $500, and other things in proportion. Arsenopyrite is another of our minerals, and is almost invariably assoiated with gold. Sometimes the gold is contained in the mineral in surprising quanities. It is found at several localities in the county. Azurite is a valuable ore of copper, easily reduced, and in a state suitable for the manufacture of sulphate of copper. It is common in the Inyo mountains, from White Mountains to Coso. Bindheimite, a rare mineral, a compound of antimony and lead, is found at the Union mine, Cerro Gordo. Bismutite. This mineral is represented in the State Museum by a single specimen found in the drift, while sluicing for gold on Big Pine Creek. Borax. Some of the largest deposits of this salt known to be in existence, are in Inyo county. During the four months from January to April 30th of this year, there were received at San Francisco, Sacramento, and Mohave 1,522,3000 pounds: an average for each month of 380,575 pounds. A large proportion of this was from Inyo county. Before the discovery of Borax in California, the price per pound in New York was thirty five cents: now the price in car load lots is nine cents per pound. Besides retaining in the country large sums of money that would otherwise would have deen spent abroad in the purchase of this article, this business has been a great help to many other industries: populating districts that but for its presence would have long remained uninhabited.

Bornite, a double sulphide of copper and iron, is found at numerous localities in the Inyo mountains. Porphyries are found in many beautiful varieties in the Inyo Mountains, and are always assolated with mines of silver or lead.

Further extracts will be published in a later issue.

THE Editor of the Kern county Gazette has lately had a taste of the joys of editing a newspaper. One subscriber writing to have his paper discontinued said; "I am able to keep two dogs, but am not able to take your rebel sheet any longer." Another subscriber ordered his paper discontinued because, he said, "it was more of a Republican paper than Democratic." Probably the Editor of the Gazette has been trying to please every body, with the usual result.

A RARE TREAT.—Yesterday morning there was about eight inches of snow on the ground. The last time that anything like this depth of snow was seen in Owens valley was in 1874. All sorts of impromptu sleighs were devisted, to which from one to six horses were hitched, and every body went sleigh riding. Plans were at once made for big excursion parties in the evening, but when evening came most of the snow on the road was gone. A good deal of fun was had by the young people while the snow lasted.

Oatmeal Nine Days Old.

I find that oatmeal porridge is generally improved by being made some days before it is required, then stored in a glass jar, brought forth and heated for use. The change effected is just that which theoretically may be expected, viz., a softening of the fibrous material, and a sweetening due to the formation of sugar. This sweetening I observed many years ago in some gruel that was partly eaten one night and left standing until next morning, when I thought it tasted sweeter, but, to be assured of this, I had it warmed again two nights afterward, so that it might be tasted under the same conditions of temperature, palate, etc., as at first. The sweetness was still more distinct, but the experiment was carried no further.

Miss E. A. Ormerod, the English entomologist, finds that the English sparrow is probably of little value as an insect-destroyer, even in its own land, as it is showing a preference for a grain diet.

WALTER Q. GRESHAM.

Newly Appointed Secretary of the Treasury.

Walter Q. Gresham, successor to Mr. Folger as Secretary of the Treasury, was born near Corydon, Indiana, in 1833. He attended Bloomington University, but was never graduated, and subsequently read law at Corydon, in the office of Judge Porter, who is still living. His professional career was highly successful, and in 1860 he was elected to the State Legislature, taking a prominent part in the war legislation of the period. He became Lieutenant Colonel of the Thirty-eighth regiment, and soon afterwards Colonel of the Fifty-third, and in the siege of Vicksburg, served as a Brigadier General. He proved himself to be a brave officer. In the fighting before Atlanta he was seriously wounded in the left leg five inches below the knee, and was compelled to quit the service. On his way home he was obliged to stop at New Albany, where he remained a year before his recovery. The tibia was fractured, and though the leg was not amputated, he still has to walk with a cane and frequently suffers intense pain from the fracture, which gives the leg a decided curve. Subsequently to his partial recovery, as military commander of the Natchez District, Gresham put down the cotton thieves infesting it, and was instrumental in sending many of the speculators back to the North.

At the termination of his military career Mr. Gresham resumed his law practice in New Albany, and in 1866 ran against the late Speaker Kerr for Congress, his popularity enabled him to reduce his opponent's majority. General Grant, when President, wished to make him Secretary of the Interior, but that being impracticable, he named him as Collector of New Orleans. The appointment was declined. Subsequently he was appointed to succeed the late Judge MacDonald as United States District Judge for his district. But Judge Gresham's tastes impelled him to a political career and, in 1880, he was an unsuccessful candidate for the United States Senate. When he received telegraphic notice of his appointment to the office of Postmaster-General he was holding Court at Evansville, the term not concluding until the 7th of April, 1883, four days after its date. Private business also demanded attention preparatory to his assuming the direction of the Post office Department. In the interim the duties of the office devolved upon First Assistant Postmaster Frank Hatton.

Mr. Gresham's political sympathies are with the Republican party, but he has not been conspicuous in political affairs. He supported Secretary Bristow's nomination in 1876 and that of General Grant in 1880. Previously to the Republican Convention of this year he was considered a "dark horse" to whom the Presidental nomination might be given. His administration as Postmaster-General was satisfactory, and his appointment as Secretary of the Treasury is generally approved.

In appearance Secretary Folger is fine looking. He is six feet high, of dark complexion, black eyes and hair, and beard originally black but now streaked with gray. His legal learning is said to be extensive, and he possesses superior ability as a public speaker. During his whole career his character has been blameless.

The curious old salt water hamlet of Quonocontaug, R. I., is noted for its big black snakes, which grow as long as the name of the place, on the brushy sand reaches near the ocean. A few days ago as Horace Wilcox, 73 years old, and a lad, Charles Green, were mowing near a pond, a black snake over seven feet long sprang out of the rank salt grass and attacked him, coiling itself around the old man's leg. Mr. Wilcox struck the reptile with his rifle, which was broken into pieces. The snake dropped, and, making another spring, wound itself around the scythe snath, and with its head uplifted above the old man struck at him. Greene came to his companion's assistance and with his scythe cut the serpent in two, but was so seriously cut by Wilcox's scythe that, after the snake had been killed, he had to be assisted to a surgeon. A few days before Greene killed the snake's mate, about eight feet long, in the same meadow.

An Afghan woman asked the ameer for a divorce because her husband was growing bald-headed. The verdict was that the head should be anointed with sour milk; that the woman should lick it off until the scalp shone again; that then she should ride through the bazar on a donkey with her face astern, and that the husband and wife should dwell in harmony.

American Fables.

An Ox which had for some time had his eye on the rich pasture of a certain Peasant, but who feared Results in case of Trespass, finally went to the Owner and said:

"My Dear Friend, I have Reasons to believe that the Goats and the Sheep Contemplate a raid on your Meadow. I am very Tender on the matter of Trespass, Stealing, Embezzlement, etc., and will Volunteer my Services to act as Sentinel for you."

The Peasent Accepted the offer with many Expressions of Gratitude, and for the first time in Weeks went to bed with a Feeling of Security.

Next morning, However, as he walked out to view his Meadow, he found the Ox just sneaking away, after Having filled his Hide to Bursting with the juciest Grass.

"Ah! is this the way you guard my Property!" exclaimed the Peasant.

"Well, you see," replied the Ox, as he commenced moving away, "on Second Consideration I Decided that it would be less trouble to eat your Grass than to Guard it from Others."

INYO INDEPENDENT.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 13,.....1884.

—Celery of fine quality is now marketed by Mr. A. C. Harvey, of Lone Pine.

—There is no immediate prospect of the Elna furnace being started up. Difficulties still remain unsettled.

—The last of this season's apple crop was gathered from the trees about Independence at the beginning of this week.

—Last Sunday was the first cold day of the present season. On Monday morning there was a little snow on the ground, not extending far out into the valley, however. The mountains on both sides of the valley were white with snow.

—The new Hotel at Keeler is nearly completed. When ready for the public the house will be as attractive by reason of its comforts and conveniences, as from its location near Owens Lake, and in a region of great interest in other ways.

—The Grand Jury that met at Independence two weeks ago deserves especial commendation. Nothing that deserved attention was neglected and every duty of the body was fully discharged. Yet instead of wasting a whole week in vain babbling the work was done and the jury discharged in one day.

—Having yet but a very limited acquaintance with the people of Inyo county the editor of the INYO INDEPENDENT would respectfully ask that notices of births, marriages and deaths be sent to the office as soon after the events as possible. No charge will be made for the publication of such notices.

FOR SALE.—One good cook stove, one parlor stove, a nice lounge, two sets of bed springs, one bedstead, one Singer sewing machine and other articles. Apply at the office of THE INYO INDEPENDENT.

HORSES FOR SALE,—Ten brood mares and eight young horses, all of good strain, for sale at market rates. I have good pasture from now until next Spring, for one hundred and fifty head of stock, and will agree to turn the animals out in good condition when the term of pasturage ends. Terms reasonable. Apply to CHARLES A. LEVY, TAXES DELINQUENT.—Tax-payers will do well to bear in mind that taxes will be delinquent after six o'clock p. m. of Monday, December 29t. Many appear to think that delinquency will not take place till January 1st. This is a mistake. If taxes are not paid on or before the last Monday in December the law compels an increase of five percent on the amount to be paid by each taxpayer.

SCHOOL APPORTIONMENT.—The County Superintendent has made the follow- apportionment of school money:

SCHOOL	AMOUNT.
Bishop Creek	$49 42.
Big Pine	24 73.
Darwin	24 73.
Independence	24 73.
Irving	24 73.
Lone Pine	49 42.
Milton	24 73.
Round Valley	24 73.
Union	24 73.
Warm Springs	24 73.

CLEAR GAIN.—The amount of taxes paid to the county this year from the borate beds in Death Valley is about $1,450. This from a region that but a short time ago was regarded as totally worthless. Most of the amount named was paid by Wm. T. Coleman, of San Francisco. The total amount of taxes levied in the county this year upon farms, buildings, stock, merchandise, business, and so on, is less by a considerable sum than the total amount levied in 1883.

EAST LYNNE.—No amateur performance could be expected to be more successful than was the performance of this play at Independence nearly three months ago. Since then requests have again and again been made to have the performance repeated. In obedience to these requests the company have agreed to perform the drama on the evening of Christmas day. The scenery will be improved, the actors will be more familiar with their parts, and altogether a better performance may be expected than on the former occasion.

PROSPECTING SUSPENDED.—Prospecting below the 2700 foot level in the North-end mines at Virginia is to be suspended. The reason given for this is because of the poor outlook for finding any ore in the lower levels and the heavy expense attending the explorations there. The diamond drill has been run in all directions on 3300 level of the Mexican winze and has demonstrated the folly of running more drifts or crosscuts in the present depressed state of affairs. The Enterprise says this change will not cause less men to be employed in the mines, as prospecting will now be done nearer the surface.

FEROCIOUS DOG.—Some evenings ago Mr. John Baxter, accompanied by his son, aged about nine years, was passing along the street when a large dog attacked the child. The savage beast was quite furious and bit entirely through the flesh of the thigh. Mr. Baxter gripped the beast by the throat and choked him till he let go of the boy, when the dog turned upon Mr. Baxter, who had all he could do to save himself from being torn. Dr. Blair was called, who passed a probe entirely through the wound and then cauterized it thoroughly. The boy has suffered severely since receiving the hurt. The dog was shot the same evening.

The Mono.

A visit to the Mono mine last night and a close inspection of the recent rich strikes impressed all who were admitted not only with the accuracy of of the Free Press report, but proved a surprise respecting the increased richness and extent. The Fortuna lode in the Bodie Con. has been worked to a point exactly on the line of the Mono Here the ore vein has improved in richness—some samples going as high as $1000 per ton. The ledge dips to the eastward the same as in the Mono where the strike was made, is of the same character, carrying iron, silver and gold but of course not so extensive, and rich, black sulphate of silver only showing in smaller streaks.

Connection on the line of the

MONO AND BODIE.

A crosscut from the 550-foot drift on the joint line will in two days tap the vein at the point referred to above, and from this connection the Mono can work the Fortuna 125 feet north of the strike. A close scrutiny by a Free Press reporter of the developments where the strike is located establishes the fact that the ledge is firm, with no indication af a pocket, and much richer at the bottom. Specimens were taken showing globules of pure native silver and specks of gold visible to the naked eye. The ore body has increased to a width, probably lacking a small fraction, of three feet. It will average well up into the hundreds. Carries about 60 per cent silver.

RICHER AS DEPTH IS ATTAINED.

There is every indication that this ore body on the 550-foot level increases in richness to the southward as depth is attained. If it only continues as it looks it can't help proving quite a bonanza. The ledge has been cut square across from the east to the west hanging-wall; a floor laid and the rich ore carefully preserved.

PROBABLY FREE MILLING.

At first our reporter was struck with the peculiarity and similarity of the ore to that of the Oro, which was not free milling, but notwithstanding the presence of iron and glistening sulphurets the quality of native silver and free gold is favorable for free milling. Without a close test there does not appear to be any manganese or other rebellious substance that would interfere with the usual simple process of working. —Free Press.

WHERE FORTUNE WAITS.—There is no better field for prospecting than in the mountain ranges along the line of the Carson & Colorado railroad. More fortunes may yet be made as readily as in the Pioneer days. The Virginia Enterprise reports that the Farrington brothers, of Garfield District, on the line of the Carson & Colorado railroad, have sold one of their mines to an English company for $950,000, and that Archie Farrington has gone to Europe with several members of the company, who came out here to examine the property, for the purpose of obtaining the purchase money. It is said there is more than $1,000,000 worth of ore in sight in the mine, which has been constantly improving in prospects ever since the Farringtons took hold of it. They went to Garfield "without a bean" three or four years ago and are now rich, solely by dint of pluck and industry. The mine just sold is about twenty miles from Hawthorne and twelve miles from Soda Springs, on the Carson & Colorado railroad, situated in a magnificent mineral country, which has hardly been touched by prospectors.

SCHOOL CHILDREN.—From the Report of the State Superintendent of Public Instruction, it appears that the number of white children who attend school in Inyo county during the year was 387. One Indian child attended. The number of children of school age who did not attend, is reported at 131, twelve of these being Indians. It is a very serious fact, and well worth the attention of parents, that nearly one third the whole number of white children in the county are reported as not attending school at all. This matter deserves the attention of the county Superintendent. The total amount received during the year, from all sources, for support of schools in the county, was $7,553.35. This is a falling off from the amount received in 1883, of $155,82. The balance of cash on hand at the close of the school year in 1883, was $663,68; the balance on hand this year was $381,92. The rate of taxation for school purposes per $100, on assessable property in the State, is .4096; less than one half of one per cent. Compare this with the rate of taxation in Inyo county, levied to pay extravagant salaries to county officers.

FOR THE COMMON GOOD.—A communication from Hon. J. M. Keeler is in reference to matter of interest to every miner and mine owner in Inyo county. Mr. Keeler says; "I have a project which will, I think, be for the advantage of miners and mine holders. I want to obtain an ore sample from every mine in the county, and from every good prospect. I simply ask that they be sent here without expense to me. I do not care for large specimens; from one to two pounds will do. I want name of mine, name of owners, and the mining District. Simply characteristic ores are wanted, probably two samples from the same mine. I shall assay and label them, and arrange them, and endeavor to attach them to the Nevada Collection by Prof. Havenor in the New Orleans Exposition, and I hope to represent them myself as well as interest the Prof. in doing so.",

The benefit that may be done to our country by a thorough advertisement of our resources is immense; the plan proposed by Mr. Keeler to do this is one of the best that could be devised. By a very slight effort on the part of these most interested the object can be accomplished. Please make the effort. Self help is the surest help. An hour of work will accomplish more than an eternity of wishing.

Big Pine Correspondence.

The change of mail time caused the following to be received too late for insertion in last week's issue:

BIG PINE, December 4th.

Thanksgiving has come and gone, —at least that is what the average paragrapher has said. We'll take his word for it. Democrats are thankful that Cleveland is elected, and Republicans are thankful it is "no worse." Turkeys are not thankful at all. Leaving out turkeys, Big Piners were thankful and enjoyed themselves while they were about it. At Hartshorn's, in the evening, was a large crowd. They didn't "float in the fairy waltz," or "No sleep till morn," etc.—Oh, no, they just danced until daylight. The supper, putting aside all culinary expressions and foreign words, was good. Fresh cranberries direct from S. F. completed the turkey's ruin. A number of persons from our sister town, Bishop Creek, were with us. They are a people capable of reciprocating our pleasant visits to their town. Furtive and anxious glances were directed towards Independence,—but alas! the same old story—not one. Yes, one, but we claim him a Big Piner—viz: Jake Miller. Big Pine will doubtless turn out en masse to attend the proposed Christmas festivities in Independence, perhaps. We ought to go down, for we know it is too far for them to come up here. Anyhow, we enjoyed ourselves and were thankful.

SPORTING.

For the last few years, and especially during the past summer and fall, this place has been a favorite resort for sportsmen, the almost illimitable number of quail in this vicinity has attracted many a jolly crew of sportsmen from Virginia City, Carson, Candelaria and elsewhere. Some excellent "wing shots" were here, but our fellow-townsman, Harry Burt, has worn the belt all summer, in spite of "domestic or imported" sportsmen. We would like to have some person come and shoot with Harry who could interest him.

SCHOOL.

Our public school is in session, with a roll of 37 pupils. A number quite too large for the accommodation afforded by the small school-house Algebra, philosophy, and physiology have been added to the list of studies this year.

PERSONAL.

Charley Mates passed through town last evening on his way home from Wood River....S. D. Woods paid our town a business visit last week....A number of our boys expect to try their fortunes in Calico this winter. No pun intended on "Calico."....We Big Piners have nothing to say about jurors. ....Dunc. Campbell is busy grinding corn....John Kinney feels in good spirits, after winning a black horse from Jim Smith on the Presidential election.

WADE.

REBECCA DEGREE.—Next Thursday evening the degree of Rebecca will be conferred on several ladies in the Odd Fellow's Lodge at Independence.

HOME AGAIN.—Mr. John L. Bourland was to start from Sonora for home last Monday morning. He was to be accompanied by his sister-in-law, Miss Hattie Berger. It is to be hoped that they were not in the mountains during the storm that prevailed for several days. In a note Mr. Bourland says: "I have had a very pleasant visit of two months with relatives and friends; much pleasanter than I anticipated. We met my wife's family in a full reunion, except one brother-in-law, at the old homestead on Thanksgiving Day. But notwithstanding all the pleasures of the visit, and the enjoyment of all the luxuries that an old settled country affords, we return to our home in Inyo better satisfied with it and the country than ever before. We think we can see a great many advantages our county possess over Tuolumne. Miss Hattie H. Berger, my wife's sister, goes back with us to remain in Inyo a year or more."

A DEVOTEE OF SCIENCE.—The devotion of Maupertuis to scientific studies was so great, that, in order to have his mind entirely free from anything that would distract his thoughts from his favorite pursuits, he attempt to leave himself "of no sex at all." Here near Independence we have an equally enthusiastic devotee of science. This philospher became curious to know the tensile strength of the muscles of his neck. He took a good inch rope made one end fast to a pole put up for a swing, put a regular "hang man's noose" on the other end of the rope, and placed it about his neck. He then climbed up about seven feet from the ground and jumped. He is a man of powerful build, and weighs about two hundred pounds; of course the strain on the rope and muscles was very severe but the muscles proved stronger; the rope broke. Our philospher is still in doubt as to the exact tensile strength of the muscles of his neck but knows that they are at least stronger than an inch rope.

Personal Mention.

G. M. Gill Esq. has moved his law office from Bishop Creek to Independence. His new location is over Webb's butcher shop.

W. K. Miller started from Lone Pine last Saturday morning on a visit to his old home in Pennsylvania. He went by Mohave, and the southern route.

A. R. Conklin Esq. returned from Sacramento last Monday. Henry Ellperton was chosen messenger by the Presidential Electors to deliver the vote of the Electors at Washington.

Mrs. Swan died at Lone Pine about the beginning of last week. The deceased was sister to Mrs. McCall, also of Lone Pine, and formerly lived in Round Valley. No relation or friend of the deceased has sent any facts in connection with her death for publication.

Some Curious Facts.

Gold beaters, by hammering, can reduce gold leaves so thin that 282,000 must be laid upon each other to produce the thickness of an inch, yet each leaf is so perfect and free from holes that one of them laid on any surface, as in gilding, gives the appearance of solid gold. They are so thin that if formed into a book, 1,500 would only occupy the space of a single leaf of common paper; and an octavo volume of an inch thick would have as many pages as the books of a well-stocked library of 1,500 volumes, with 400 pages in each. Still thinner than this is the coating of gold upon the silver wire of what is called gold lace, and we are not sure that such coating is not of only one atom thick. Platinum and silver can be drawn into wire much finer than human hair. A grain of blue vitriol or carmine will tinge a gallon of water so that in every drop the color may be perceived. A grain of musk will scent a room for twenty years, and will at the end of that period have lost little of its weight. The carrion crow smells its food many miles off. A burning taper uncovered for a single instant, during which it does not lose one thousandth of a grain, would fill with light a sphere four miles in diameter, so as to be visible in every part of it. The thread of the silkworm is so small that many of them are twisted together to form our finest sewing thread; but that of the spider is smaller still, for two drachms of it by weight would reach from London to Edinburg , or 400 miles. In the milt of a codish, or in water in which vegetables have been infused, the microscope discovers animalcules of which many thousands together do not equal in bulk a grain of sand; and yet nature, with a singular prodigality, has supplied many of these with organs as complete as those of the whale or the elephant, and their bodies consist of the same substance, or ultimate atoms, as that of man himself. In a single pound of such matter there are more living creatures than of human beings on the face of the globe. What a scene has the microscope opened to the admiration of the philosophic inquirer. Water, mercury, sulphur, or in general any substance when sufficiently heated, rises as invisible vapor or gas; that is, reduced to the aeriform state. Great heat, therefore, would cause the whole of the material universe to disappear, and the most solid bodies to become as invisible and impalpable as the air we breathe. Few have contemplated an annihilation of the world more complete than this.

Inspiration of "Lady Macbeth."

Lady Macbeth is essentially a political woman of the close of the Renaissance. Three queens who had great qualities, and were absolutely devoid of conscience, must have been forced upon the attention of Shakespeare during the long period when he was in London. We find in Lady Macbeth something of each. They were the Florentine authoress of the "Massacre of St. Bartholomew," Queen Elizabeth and the queen of Scotland, who may have risen to a saintship through nineteen years of imprisonment, but who was anything but a saint when she married Bothwell. Shakespeare presumably often longed to continue his series of historical plays up to the close of Elizabeth's reign. We may be sure his fingers itched to write the dramas in which the dramatic queens I have named would have been leading personages. But it was impossible for him, so long as Elizabeth toyed with the sons of Catherine de Medicis, to have brought her and her astrologer on the stage, or to have shown how she dominated Charles IX and her other sons.

It would have been repugnant to a man of Shakespeare's genius to have flattered like a courtier his sovereign through five acts, and it would have been dangerous to paint her as she was. When James came to the throne, whatever admiration or affection the dramatist entertained for the defunct queen must have been heightened by the spectacle of her successor's mean vices, and by the odious court of which he was the center. Shakespeare might have often in Elizabeth's lifetime turned over in his mind her hypocritical prosecution of Davidson, who, so to speak, was smeared by her with the blood of Mary of Scotland. But the great, though unamiable queen, was no more; her foibles and harsh actions were condoned. She had been very good to the playwright and manager of the Globe theatre, and it would have been base ingratitude of him to show her at her worst on the stage, for the entertainment of drunken Anne of Denmark and James' minions. He would concede enough to king and courtiers in bringing the witches into the tragedy. Mary was being rehabilitated, and her son was on the throne. So, out of the three queens, a typical woman was formed. But there was more in her of Catherine and Bess than of Mary Stuart. She was not devoid of heart, and was actuated only by ambition and la raison d'etat. The execution of Essex was the occasion of intense moral suffering to his royal mistress, who, towards the end of her life, was tormented by remorse and insomnia. As it would not have done for stage purposes to have shown a typical female politician of the period sitting up silent and moody all night in her bed, Lady Macbeth was made to walk and talk in her sleep.

He Revealed Himself.

A gentleman who had courted and married his wife in a full beard and lived for ten years with her endowed with the same hirsute adornment quietly determined to have it cut off. His wife found it difficult to recognize him, and she sat staring at his strange appearance for some time. "Well," he exclaimed, "have you nothing else to do but sit still?" "I suppose you expect me to do all the work while you loaf as usual," he snappishly said. "Why, is it you after all—I knew you the moment you spoke," she replied.

Bill Nye on Polar Expeditions.

Everything shows us that the summer is gone and the twilight of the year is settling down upon us. We begin to wonder whether we had better run the furnace this winter or take the money and buy Cuba, so as to have a winter resort. Speaking about winter resorts, a military friend of mine writes me that he wouldn't ask anything better than a commission to make a trip in search of the open Polar Sea. He invites me to go. I thanked him for the invitation and asked him when he wanted his men picked, before or after the trip.

While I would like well enough to catch a few pickerel in the open Polar Sea and breathe the crisp, pure air of no degrees and no minutes longitude due west of a given point, I am almost positive that I will dig the clinkers out of a large base burner this winter, and write foamy, frothy, sunny, soothful poems for a dying world.

While no one would more cheerfully enter into the giddy whirl of Esquimaux society, or load his stomach with cod-liver oil and old harnesses and saddles with vinegar, in order that he might gratify a morbid curiosity as to whether the North Pole had a hot box or not, yet I shall not avail myself of the opportunity to go this winter.

While few could more joyously contemplate a life here it would take a ninety-day i a lifetime to mature, I am free to say that I would rather, at present, climb a tall tree until the payee gets by.

Had No Cough.

A gentleman of wonderful vigor for one who has passed four score years, is stopping at Congress Hall. He is a widower and a man of large wealth. Widows as well as maidens enjoy his society, for he is witty and wise. One day he was introduced to a maiden not much past thirty. After a pleasant chat about life and living, the lady remarked, "Are you married, sir?" "Oh, no, I am susceptible, though," replied the venerable. "By the way, madame," said he, "are you married?" "I am not," she replied, "and I made up my mind I never would unless I could get a good catch—a man with brains and money." "Then," said the old gentleman, "you are after money with a husband. Well, Tilden has a barrel, I have a bushel, and brains enough to look after it. How would you like such a young man as myself?" "I like you well, sir. You are sensible, and the money is sufficient; but you lack one, just one, only one, requirement, so far as I am able to judge." "Well, what is that, madam?" queried the venerable. "You do not seem to have a bad cough," she replied. The dazed veteran arose and beat a hasty retreat, while a clear, ringing voice, mingled with laughter, remarked, "Stay! Stay! Don't be in a hurry."

The Transmutation of Metals.

The Arabians, no doubt, derived their ideas of the transmutation of metals into gold, and the belief in immunity from death by the use of the philosopher's stone from China. Among all the metals with which the alchemist worked, mercury was preeminent, and this is stated to be really the philosopher's stone, of which Geber, Kalid and others spoke in the times of the early caliphs. In China it was employed excessively as a medicine. On nights when dew was falling, sufficient was collected to mix with the powder of cinnabar, and this was taken until it led to a serious disturbance of the bodily functions. In the ninth century an emperor, and in the tenth a prime minister, died from the effects of an overdose of mercury. Chinese medical books say it takes 200 years to produce cinnabar; 300 years it becomes lead; in 200 years more it becomes silver, and then by obtaining a transforming substance called "vapor of harmony," it becomes gold. This doctrine of the transformation of mercury into other metals is 2,000 years old in China.

Took It for a War Map.

"Now, here," said McGargle to his wife, "is Khartoum."

"Yes," acquiesced Mrs. McGargle, demurely.

"And here, at this point of the dotted line, is where Gen. Wolsley will disembark his troops for the expedition that is to relieve Gen. Gordon."

"Precisely."

"Then they will move up this dark line which is the Nile—"

"But that's not the Nile," interrupted McGargle's better half.

"It isn't?" he inquired, glaringly.

"Not much. That's the bias."

"The bias!"

"Why, yes, you lunatic. Don't you know that's my diagram pattern for little Johnny's fall suit?"

"Thunderation! I took it for a war map. I had a war map—supplement form—not five minutes ago. Some folks think they are awful smart," and with his last withering sneer McGargle lounged out after an evening newspaper containing another diagram of the latest millionaire-coach man imbroglio.

Blowing the Ram's Horn.

A special feature of the services of the Hebrew New Year is the blowing of the "shofar," or the ram's horn, by the rabbi, which is done twice during the service, and, except on the day of "Yom Kipper," or the Day of Atonement, which occurs on the 28th of September, when the horn is blown once, it is never used in the services. The trumpet is a valuable ram's horn, and its sound is peculiarly solemn and penetrating. The blowing of the horn is intended to awaken the people to a sense of their wrong-doings and to call them to repentance. Atonement is to be made for all wrongs committed, and the season is one of purification for the beginning of a new spiritual life.

At a fashionable ball, Mrs. Gattlefry, who is always careless in expressing herself, approaches Mr. McPeal, and says: "Supper is ready. Why don't you take a lady to eat?" "Be-be—because," replies the stuttering McPeal, "I ner—ner—ner—never e-e-e-eat la-la-ladies." Smart man, but he ought to be killed.—[Arkansaw Traveler.

LA SENORITA.

I saw her on a golden day,
The Spanish belle of Monterey.
When first her beauty's glad surprise
Shone out like starlight in the skies
'Twas evening on the Alamo,
When senoritas come and go,
Each looking with coquettish glances,
From lace mantilla that enhances
Their beauty as the soft moss throws
An added splendor round the rose.

The high comb in her raven hair
Held one red blossom prisoned there;
And round her neck an amber chain
Had caught the sunlight's yellow rain.
The dusky bloom of throat and chin
Was like a flower with vine therein;
The glad spring in her step, the South
Glowed in the rose of cheek and mouth,
While over form and face was thrown
A spell the coldest heart must own.

She passed serenely thro' the throng,
A perfect poem set to song,
While e'en her graceful fan had taught
Some voiceless love the speech it sought.
She did recall a night of stars,
Soft serenades 'neath lattice bars,
A rose dropped silently below
Where slept the moonbeams' drifted snow,
Fond looks for love alone to mark—
A dagger thrust made in the dark.

I watched her as she moved apart
And left a winter in each heart,
Then said, half sadly: "As the flower
Hath grace and beauty for an hour,
So she, this radiant newcomer,
Is but the blossom of a summer,
Like Joshua I would command
The sun of loveliness to stand,
That one so exquisite as she Might bloom and shine immortally."

Employment of Women in Europe.

Concerning the industrial position of women in England, it is apparent that they are making progress more slowly than in the United States, chiefly on account of the contempt with which labor is looked upon in monarchical and aristocratic countries. It is more honorable in the sight of a lord or lady to be supported by charity—that is, out of the surplus in the hands of the few wrung from the toil of the many—than to support one's self, if a woman, by useful and honorable toil. Women have been making their way into many employments, but the occupation of teaching is still looked upon as the only one "genteel," and genteel only when the worker is a governess. The agrarian troubles in Ireland have added a considerable number to the class of English women who can no longer live idly on the profits of others' starvation; and these "landladies" are many of them incapable of earning a penny at anything demanding any greater attainments than those required for the nursery. They have crowded the ranks of the governess, and compensation has accordingly declined. Women have been employed in telegraphy in England for a generation, but they have never risen above the lowest grade. They are also employed in the post-offices, and their honesty and accuracy have been frequently noted by their superiors. It is a curious fact that the first office for the employment of women in London was opened by Adelaide Proctor, the poet, whose active and sympathetic temperament induced her to aid her most unfortunate sisters.

One of the kinds of work women do very profitably in the United States, wood engraving, is done almost exclusively by foreigners in London. Another which is highly remunerative—painting on china and making designs for pottery—men have tried to drive women out of in England, but they have not succeeded. House decorating, which is a lady's occupation, and not wholly unknown in the United States, is followed with great distinction by the Misses Garrett, in London, the sisters of Mrs. Millicent Fawcett, wife of the postmaster-general. Many of the finest homes in the metropolis bear evidence of their taste and learning. The greatest difficulty the promoters of women's work experience in the older world lies in the shallow and flimsy "education" of those seeking the higher kinds of work. The ability to sing a little, embroider on textile fabrics, paint a little, dance a little, can no longer pass as an education. One of the most hopeful signs of the times in England is the formation of an association of young ladies who call themselves the Emergency Society, each member of which binds herself to learn some art, profession, or trade so thoroughly that she will be able to take care of herself, should the necessity to do so arise. In a land where fortunes are hereditary, and in most cases so protected by conditions as to secure them against the squandering propensities of heirs, such a society is not so much needed as in a country where fortunes exist to-day and to-morrow take wings. Yet what proportion of the daughters of our rich men are educated so as to be able to take care of themselves?—Chicago Herald.

A St. Louis man wants a divorce because his wife makes him say "please."

An Englishman's Courtesy.

Standing before one of the monuments of Westminster Abbey with a young American friend, a gentleman in black, with a black velvet skull-cap on his head, came up to us, heard us talking, and volunteered some information. We remarked that we were looking for the monument to Major Andre. "Oh, here it is," said he, and went on to explain how the heads of both Andre and Washington had been broken off and renewed. He then asked if we came from a distance. Learning that we were Americans, he said, "Come with me, and I will show you something of the Abbey." He took us up to the tomb of the saint, Edward the Confessor, showed us the tombs of other kings, and pointed out the fact that the shield, helmet, and saddle which hung above were, without doubt, the very ones which Henry V., the conqueror of France, used. He showed us the slab under which Cromwell was buried until the reaction came, under Charles II., when the body was ignominiously cast out. I asked if Cromwell stabled his horses in the Abbey. "No," said he. "But did he not in many of the great churches of England?" "Not Cromwell, but the Puritans," was the reply.

He asked if we would like to go into the Jerusalem Chamber. It was the very place, above all others, where we wished to go. He asked if there were other Americans present. We knew of none. But he actually went about from person to person, inquiring if they were Americans, or if they came from a distance. My companion whispered the question, "Who is the man?" "A verger, I suppose," said I, and began to think of getting my shilling ready. But we asked an attendant, and, to our astonishment, we learned that it was the Dean himself.

By considerable effort, and after several refusals, he succeeded in getting quite a company of stupid-looking people to accompany him to the Jerusalem Chamber. Then, standing before the old fire-place, he explained to us how this old establishment was in former years a monastery, and this Jerusalem Chamber (so called from a picture of Jerusalem which it used to contain) was the abbott's drawing, or withdrawing, room; that some great events had occurred here; that the church was never heated in old times, and Henry IV., whose bust was there in the corner, who deposed and murdered Richard II., being troubled by his conscience in his later years, was once praying under one of the very arches which we had just left, and was taken with a chill. He was brought here, this being the only place on the premises where there was a fire, and was laid before this very fire place. Here he became insensible, and was supposed to be dead. His son, Prince Hal, afterwards Henry V., came in while his father was thus lying, and, supposing him to be dead, took up the crown which was upon the table (an evidence that kings commonly wore their crowns in those days), and put it upon his own head, while he made resolutions to turn from his wild courses. His father, suddenly coming to consciousness, was very angry, and soundly berated the young prince for being, as he supposed, so eager to possess the crown. Afterwards the old king died in this chamber.

Here, too, the Westminster Confession and Shorter Catechism were prepared, the eminent divines sitting about this very table, and before this fire. Here the New Testament revisers met for their consultations. (The Dean showed his appreciation of the intelligence of his audience by remarking, "Perhaps you may have heard that the New Testament has been revised.") Here the Old Testament revisers now meet.

From the Jerusalem Chamber he took us to the refectory or dining-room; showed us the dais or raised platform on which the abbott and officers of the Abbey used to sit at their meals, and the two rows of tables, running down the room, where the monks sat. The present tables are said to have been made from planks from the wreck of the Spanish Armada. There, in the center of the roof, was the opening where the smoke used to escape when the monks had a fire in their dining-room. This was the room where Elizabeth Woodville, widow of Edward IV., took sanctuary with her children, to escape death by the hands of Richard III. Here she remained for many months.

After this the Dean dismissed all the company except "the two American gentlemen," telling one woman who had a baby that she must tell the baby about this when it grew up, and then offered to show us Dean Stanley's library. This was so unexpected a privilege that our breath was almost taken away by the proposition. As we entered the house, the Dean remarked, with a smile, "I do not think those people knew that I was the Dean." He took us through a pleasant hall, up a short flight of steps, and into a room of moderate size lined with books. It was lighted from one end by a mullioned window with stained glass. He showed us the place where the desk stood on which Dean Stanley wrote those remarkable books which have so distinguished his name; and, in a little closet, the very pigeon-holes where he kept his sermons. Thence he took us to the bedchamber where Dean Stanley died. "Is that the bed in which he died?" we asked. "Yes," was the reply; but immediately after, "No, I think that must be ours."

He took us down through the hall of the deanery, and when we noticed a picture of President Garfield in the hall, he said, "Yes; an American sent me that, to hang up in the Abbey."

"Which way do you mean to go from here?" was his next inquiry. And when told, he said, "Well, I'm a countryman, and do not know very well the way about London; but I'm going out, and we will ask a policeman." So this remarkable man actually took pains to inquire of two policemen, and, having found the right omnibus, gave us the necessary directions, and, shaking hands, bade us good-by. Upon our expressing our thanks for his most unexpected kindness, he said, "Oh, I like to take Americans about the Abbey, and when I have half an hour to spare, I often lead a party to the places of special interest."

What American in an equally prominent position, a position involving so many cares and such heavy responsibilities, would find time to give to the instruction or entertainment of two utter strangers from a foreign land? I know nothing of the literary or theological standing of Dean Stanley's successor, but I am sure that eminent man could not have been followed by any one in the English Church more thoroughly pervaded by his own kindly and catholic spirit. Every American may well desire that when he visits this ancient fane, which is the common inheritance of all Anglo-Saxons, it may be upon a day when Dean Bradley acts as guide to strangers.—Rev. J. Cliabe.

Characteristics of Certain Cities.

Alexandria sits demurely by the sea, an Oriental maiden attracted to the sandy shore of the Mediterranean to barter her spices, silks, mats, with the infidel, concluding to remain there, and wander no more.

Jaffa lifts up her head from a rocky cliff, and with one hand salutes the Mediterranean, and with the other welcomes the caravans from Damascus and Jerusalem. Jerusalem is still the child of faith, dwelling where little grows, where there is naturally little trade, or commerce, or manufacturing; drawing her supplies mysteriously from the rocks and the skies; yet different races, different religions, different civilizations, believe in her and huddle together about her, awaiting something that does not appear.

Jerusalem, sitting alone on the rocky mountain-side of Judea, is the sublime child of faith, coming of faith in the past, looking forward to the future by faith.

Damascus is the fair Naiad issuing from the Abana or Baroda mysteriously changing its musical waters into olive groves, tropical luxuriance, and a teeming population, and sitting in queenly robes, with her feet in the sands of the desert of the Hanron, amid mosques, and minarets, and robed men, smoking the nargileh on divans, or by playing fountains and cooling streams.

Beirut, standing proudly on a peninsula-shaped headland on one side of a beautiful crescent bay, is the commercial or moral mistress of Syria, sending the currents of life up the French highway to Damascus, as the heart sends the blood through the artery to the head.

Smyrna is the mistress of two ages and civilizations, reposing on a quiet plateau by the sea, welcoming the commerce of the West, guarding the grave of Polycarp and the manners and forms of the East.

Constantinople, at a distance, is the sightliest of the cities, but on approaching near you see she wears a mask, and behind that mask you perceive restlessness, discontent, perfidy, and sullen waiting for revolution or chaos.

Athens is the bride of the cities, as I have said in a former letter. She holds in one hand a broken marble pointing to the ruins of her art in the heroic ages—the art which has conquered the world—and in the other the scepter of now springing power.

Naples, as we approach it by steamer from the south and round the point, rises up out of the sea as a charming, timid apparition shrinking away from Vesuvius, who holds a smoking firebrand in one hand, shaking it over her head, and yet afraid to go in the other direction, as he thrusts the other hand in his subterranean pocket, touching secret springs that let off convulsions in Ischia and the regions beyond her.

Rome, the attractive, the interesting, the historic, the hider and the revealer of the secrets of her mother, the "Mistress of the World," sitting in a royal way on her seven hills—full as she is of art and history—is nothing else, in form, so much as she is a saint. She is the high priestess, in her tent, of the cities of the earth. Religion is scrolled upon her buildings, outside and inside, on her streets, on her calendar, on her garments, on her food, and manners. I do not know how far this sainthood strikes in, or what it is worth. I speak only of color.

Florence, one of the queens, reposes, half-asleep, half-awake, in a beautiful cradle of the Appenines, dreaming over the splendors of the past, displaying still a matchless profusion of art treasures, and beguiling those who come under the influence of her charms through labyrinths of plastic and painted beauty.

Venice, the daughter of commerce, sits with her feet in the Adriatic, snuffing the breezes of the sea, browned and weather-beaten and her white robes soiled, as she has toyed with the gondoliers and water sprights so long.

Paris is the city of sentiment. Not so much ideas, or principles, or even prudence, or policy, as sentiment, reigns. The inspiration of her patriotism is the love of glory; of her letters and art, the desire to gratify artificial demands and tastes rather than to portray ideal truth or to exalt humanity; of her efforts in dress and manners, to create and maintain a blind imperial goddess, Fashion, and compel others to worship at her shrine. Sentiment is the height and depth, length and breadth of the popular feeling. It is curious to note that painters and sculptors in Paris do not rely on the expression of soul, of character, in their works so much as on intrinsic circumstances, sensational attitudes, combinations, adjuncts. If you see a Statue of Liberty on a column in a public square, she is represented as standing on tiptoe on one foot, throwing the other far up in the air behind, leaning far forward with a flaming torch in her hand, and her wings spread, as if eager to leave the spot and fly away to the ends of the earth, while your whole thought is absorbed in the figure and you have no interest in the face. You see no character, no truth, no ideal. You have a sensational display. Yet Paris in her clean robes is attractive and beautiful.

Thirty years ago General Phil Sheridan was a lieutenant, and known as the best song-and-dance man on the Texas frontier.

Moses and Levy.

In a small Russian city on the principal street, stood two houses opposite to each other. The lower story of each house was a stone. Both sides traded in old clothes, debilitated furniture and similar brick-a-brac. The proprietor of one of these emporiums was named Levy. When a man trades in old clothes, and his name is Levy, he is a descendant of Abraham. The gentlemanly boss of the shop over the way was named Moses. He was one of the chosen people. They were rivals in trade. They cut rates, and tried hard to freeze each other out.

Just at this crisis, in consequence of the celebration of Easter solemnities, the Russians were carried away by religious zeal, that whenever they saw a Jew with anything they wanted, they knocked him down and took it away brom him and pounded him. Under these circumstances, the Isrealites of the particular town, fearing that they might be attacked, concluded to move out. They did so, with Levy and Moses at the head of the possession. They had sold out their business and their houses. The expedition had not gone very far, however, when Levy sneaked out of the procession, and returned to the town. He returned during the night. He had indeed sold his house, but he had secretly, through the medium of a Christian real estate agent, purchased the establishment of his rival Moses, which place suited him much better than his own.

Levy congratulated himself that now Moses was out of the city, he would have it all his own way, and do a regular land-office business. He expected some Christian would carry on Moses' busines at the old stand, but he was not in the least afraid of the competition of any Christian. It was the Jewish competition that made him tired. Levy was in fine spirits at the success of his scheme to get rid of his rival, and he was astonished that as shrewd a Jew as Moses should be taken in so badly.

Early next morning, Levy got up, opened a window, and looked across the street at his former place of business, which seemed to him to be smaller and more insignificant than ever. While thus gazing at his former residence, and chuckling to himself over the success of his strategy in getting rid of his hatred rival, his complexion suddenly became as pallid as a piece of aged tripe, and his eyeballs protruded like those of a crab, for a window in the house opposite was opened, and the familiar face of Moses was visible. He, too, was partially paralized at the apparition in his former house, and there the two stood with open mouths staring at each other.

It seems that Moses was quite as sly as Levy. He, too, had sold his house, and through the medium of the same Christian real estate agent, had purchased that of his reval. After Moses and Levy had gazed at each other for several minutes, both relaxed their features, smiled and then roared.

"Good morning," said Levy.

"You are another," replied Moses.

It finally occurred to them to consolidate their business, and, as they were the only Jews left in the place, and, Easter being over the religious zeal of the Russians having abated, they rapidly accumulated wealth under the firm name of Moses and Levy.

The Capital City of Scotland.

Edinburgh, the gaily attired daughter of the North, has charms that none of her sisters have. In situation, she is of the type of the highlands. Architecturally, though using stone exclusively, she has overcome its difficulties, and arrayed herself most picturesquely. Her airy gables, dormer windows, turrets, and high, cylinder chimneys, together with the intermingling of buildings of various forms and sizes, breaking the monotony of blocks and streets, and bringing out striking reliefs and effects, produce a general appearance, as one glances over its long and wide stretches of buildings, of one vast interconnected Gothic pile. Doubtless the architecture of separate buildings, looked at in detail, would be quite open to criticism on the basis of any one classic standard; but in general effect, when one is not hypercritical and is ready to be pleased with what is picturesque and attractive in combination, Edinburgh is a beautiful city. The separate leaves of a tree may not be beautiful, the individual limbs may not be attractive, the single tree may be open to criticism, but the combination of leaves, limbs, and trees in a forest, when viewed at a distance, is nearly always beautiful. Critics who carry the eye of a Ruskin to each building and each part of the building, may criticize Edinburgh and go into raptures over Venice; but an eye that contemplates the effect of combination will pronounce Edinburgh a beautiful city in comparison with the monotonous streets of Venice. Glasgow as a city of residences, a seat of thought and architectural beauty, is far inferior to Edinburgh, but as a commercial center it is far superior.

Racing Horses in Texas.

"Ya'as," said an old settler, "we ran hosses in Texas."

"Then you take an interest in the noble sport?" asked the stranger

"I was engaged in a horse race some years ago, in which I took a right smart interest."

"Running race?"

"Hit war."

"Mile or half-mile track?"

"Hit war a fifty-mile track, stranger. Texas is a big State."

"A fifty-mile track! I never heard of such a thing. And did you win?"

"You bet."

"How much did you win?"

"I won the hoss, stranger."

How the Sultan Goes to Prayer.

At one end of the main palace is a handsome cream-colored mosque with two minarets. Around this, though kept at a respectable distance, were crowds of people. The street leading to the mosque was also lined with an expectant multitude. Men were sweeping the street clean, and then sprinkling fresh gravel over it, to make the passage of the carriage easier. Presently, everything was complete, and soon after the glitter of arms appeared in the distance. The escort of soldiery was an immense one, representing the very flower of the Turkish army. They are well-developed men, elegantly uniformed, and under thorough discipline, as was evidenced by the admirable style of the few evolutions performed incidentally.

When the soldiers had been distributed properly in phalanxes about the door, I could get a view of the royal train. There were two carriages filled with favored members of the harem who did not alight. There was one carriage containing the five princes of the royal household, scared looking little fellows, from ten to perhaps sixteen years of age. There was the Sultan's Cabinet and immediate staff on foot, directly in front of the Imperial baroache. There were two other men in the carriage with his Majesty, one of whom—a fine looking man—was Osman Pasha, I was told. The carriage halted, his Majesty alighted, and in company with a few of his inmates, ascended to the mosque, the head priest sweeping off the steps before him. As he did so, the mueddin in the minaret balcony above sounded his sonorous call to prayer.

Of course I could not get a good view of the Sick Man owing to the tantalizing movements of the boat. He is apparently of medium height, and others who were present say he has an expressionless face, indicative of dissipation. Perhaps his sickness is not wholly political. He was dressed after the most approved French style, in a black suit, with frock coat, black tie, and the national fez as a headdress. The lappel of his coat was distinguished by two or three decorations, including, doubtless, the Star and Garter. I am told that his devotion consumed an hour.

A Great Drought.

Richard A. Proctor says that the age of the earth is placed by some at 500,000,000 years, and still others of later time, among them the Duke of Argyll, place it at 10,000,000 years. None place it lower than 10,000,000, knowing what processes have been gone through. The earth must have become old. Newton surmised, although he could give no reason for it, that the earth would at one time become perfectly dry. Since then it has been found that Newton was correct. As the earth keeps cooling it will become porous, and great cavities will be formed in the interior which will take in the water. It is estimated that this process is now in progress so far that the water diminishes at the rate of the thickness of a sheet of writing paper a year. At this rate in 9,000,000 years the water will have sunk a mile, and in 15,000,000 years every trace of water will have disappeared from the face of the globe.

A traveler just from the south reports the following: On one of the southern railroads there is a station called Sawyer. Lately a newly married couple boarded the train, and were very loving indeed. The brakeman noticed the gushing groom kiss the bride about two hundred times, but maintained a serene quiet. Finally, the station in question was reached and just after the whistle sounded the groom gave the bride a rousing smack on the lips, and the brakeman opened the door and shouted, "Sawyer, Sawyer." "What's that?" responded the groom, looking over his shoulder at the brakeman, "Sawyer, Sawyer." "Well, I don't care if you did; she's my wife."

Hello, Blinks," exclaimed our editor, as a seedy-looking individual shambled into the office, "what's on foot now?" "Why, you see, sir," replied Blinks, "I am about to start another paper, and—" "Another one?" queried the editor; "what has become of the Tornado?" "Busted." "And the Tomahawk, and Cyclone, and half a dozen others?" "Gone up, gone up," sadly relied the protector of the ephemeral publications. "So you are going to start a new one, are you? What is the paper to be?" "I thought as the others didn't pay," murmured Blinks, "I thought I'd start a subscription paper this time."

Algernon (looking down into Alice's "celestial blue orbs")—"My darling, I—I—I've heard a widdle I should like to ask you." Alice (an innocent lovey-dovey with long eye-lashes)—"Yes, Algy dear?" Algy—"Er—er—oh, yes. What is the bwightest idea in life?" Alice (pondering deeply)—"In life?—hum!—hum!—the brightest?—hum!—in life?—hum! I don't know, dear. I'll give it up." Algy (triumphantly) "Why, your eye, dear of course!" Pause of ten minutes. Alice (suddenly, with a little scream of delight)—"Oh, yes! I see—my idea—oh, yes. That is good, of course." (And then they wonder that men are no more humorous than they are.)

A married couple were out promenading in the suburbs of Austin one day. Presently the wife said: "Think, Albert, if the brigands should come now, and take me away from you!" "Impossible, my dear." "But, suppose they did come and carry me away, what would you say?" "I should say," replied the husband, "that the brigands were new at the business. That's all."

Further Extracts From the Report of the State Mineralogist.

Lime. In the Inyo range there are large outcrops of limestone and marble from nearly black to pure white. These mountains promise a plentiful field for future research, and a thorough study of them will probably show much light on the geology of the state. Marble is also found in the foot hills of the Sierra Nevada. At Big Pine there is a cropping of beautiful white marble of which there is a cube, cut and polished, in the Museum. Cerusite. This mineral is very easily distinguished, and is rather common in California, seldom in crystals, but generally associated with galena, anglesite, aryosite, chrysocolla, malachite, silver minerals and gold. Fine crystalized specimens, with the associates above mentioned, are found in the Modoc mine, and in many other localities in the Inyo and Coso Mountains. It is a valuable ore of lead, and in certian localities an indication of silver ores. A considerable proportion of the lead ores worked at the Cerro Gordo mines were cerusite ores. Thirty two thousand tons of lead were produced in these mines during the time in which they were worked.

Chalcopyrite. It is a valuable ore of copper, but its metallurgy presents so many difficulties that it is found generally more profitable to concentrate it and ship it to England than to work it here. Under some circumstances it has been found economical to reduce it to a matte by a single furnace. It is found in the Inyo Mountains. Cholcosite: another ore of copper, is also found in connection with silver in the same range.

Chrysocolla is a valuable ore of copper, for the reason that it can be easily reduced in the water jacket furnace to a metallic copper. It occurs near San Carlos, and at the Eclipse mine. An extensive bed of fire clay was discovered not long since in Inyo county, and having been tested in the cupola furnaces there, and found to stand well; this material will be likely to come in considerable use, as many structures of the kind will in the course of time, be needed in that region, which abounds with rich galena and other ores requiring to be reduced by smelting.

Garnets are found in large semi-crystalline masses, weighing ten to twenty pounds, and of a light color, in the Coso mining district. Geocronite, a sulphide of lead and antimony, has been observed with galena in small masses in the Inyo mountains. A specimen was exhibited in the California collection at the Paris exposition of 1878.

Gold in paying quantities is found at many places in Inyo county. Crystals of gold are never found large. Beautiful octahedral crystals of gold are found in the Ida mine.

Grossularite, a lime garnet, has often been mistaken for tin. It is found near San Carlos.

Specular iron ore is found in Owens Valley. A fine specimen is in the State Museum.

Magnetic iron ore is found in a number of localities in the Inyo Mountains. Fine specimens of loadstone have lately been sent to the State Mining Bureau, from the Slate Range, where it exists in quantity.

Malachite, green carbonate of copper, is found at a number of localities in the Inyo Mountains.

Obsidian is found in Inyo county. Some varieties of obsidian cut beautifully, and might be used for ornamental purposes, for paper weights, vases, bases of clocks, and similar purposes.

Phosgenite, chloro-carbonate of lead: A single specimen has been found in quartz from the Silver Sprout mine. This is a rare mineral, and has the property of being luminous.

"Bur," old English for a whetstone. This valuable mineral has been found at several localities in the State; is in Owens Valley, known as "Little Butte," which is a prominent landmark on the line dividing Russ from Union mining districts. The stone is hard and brecciated, resembling the celebrated French buhr stone. Dr. J. B. Trask, first State Geologist of California, in his first report says of this stone; "Its admirable adaptation to milling needs no comment. The value of this rock cannot be too highly esteemed in this State, where the prospective is so flattering of its becoming a grain growing country equaled by few on the Atlantic slope. The heavy expenses that are now incurred, and the future wants of the State in this particular, and our dependent condition on foreign import destroyed. These rocks have as yet attracted little notice, but the rapidly increasing wants of the State will ere long bring them into requisition."

["Little Butte" lies near to the Carson and Colorado railroad, by which the stones could easily be conveyed where wanted. A fortune awaits the parties who will open this valuable deposit.]

In the State Museum is a specimen from the Half Dollar mine, Inyo county, that resembles meerschaum, but as yet no analysis has been made to determine it.

Of the results of mining in Inyo, the report says: "The value of the bullion taken out * * amounts probably to a total of twenty million dollars, nearly three-fourths of it consisting of silver, and mostly the product of the Cerro Gordo mines. From 1873 to about 1879 the value of the silver taken out here averaged over $1,500,000 per year, and as the ores were mined and beneficiated at a moderate expense, the profits realized on this production were large. Recently there has occurred some revival of mining operations at various points in Inyo county, this increased activity being due in part to more careful and economical modes of procedure, but mainly to the advent of the Carson and Colorado railroad in that region, whereby the cost of working the mines and shipping out their products has been greatly reduced."

Stibnite, an ore of antimony, is found in the Panamint Mountains Inyo county, in large veins.

The report names several other minerals that are found in Inyo, but as these have not much commercial value, further mention of them is not necessary. Enough has been quoted from the report in the issues of last week and this, to show that Inyo county has such varied and valuable mineral resources, as makes it a most interesting region to the man of science, and offering great inducements to the capitalist and miner.

MICHAEL WAGNER shot himself hrough the head lately, at Tuscarora, Nevada. Losses in mining stock and being beaten in a law suit are supposed to hove unsettled his mind.

THE Irrigation Convention held at Fresno did not result in producing any plans of dealing with the subject that would be generally satisfactory. The difference of opinion among the people on the subjct of irrigation was found to be so great that none of the plans proposed could be adopted. It is only by the repetition of such meetings, however, and the calm and thorough discussion of the subject, that the matter can be finally settled in a peaceful and satisfactory way.

THE papers are rife with reports of the Kennedy murder in San Francisco. There being such a wide difference in the statements of the various papers that nothing definite can be learned. They all agree however, in that she was a woman of a hasty and jealous disposition, and that the shooting was not warranted by any act of her husband. Of late when ever there has been a case of ill treatment or seduction the cry has been raised "shoot him" and the belief has become prevalent that it is justifiable so to do. It is about time that an end was put to such infernal nonsense.

THE demand for fertile land is every day becoming more imperative. The vast area of fine land in Owens valley, the abundance of water for irrigation, the fine climate, and the existance of a railroad that has removed the objection of isolation, these are advatages possessed by very few localities on the whole Pacific coast. So great and so manifest are these advantages, that men of capital cannot fail to see them, and already there is danger that a vast amount of the best land and most valuable water privileges may fall into the hands of a few men. This would be a public misfortune, it would be found the same evil here that in other parts of the State is now so bitterly complained of. Timely action on the part of the present settlers can easily avert any such misfortune. By joint effort large ditches may be made in other parts of the valley, like that at Bishop Creek. These would supply water for much land that would certainly secure settlers, who in turn would help to extend the system. The lower part of the valley has the best climate, and is the better adapted to vine yards and orchards than the northern part. The land already under cultivation is of unsurpassed fertillty. These advantages, if pressed upon the public notice, would certainly result in bringing such an influx of desireable settlers as would place the county on a basis of permanent prosperity.

Tons of Dollars

There are now in the Treasury vaults here 136,000,000 of silver dollars, which weigh 9,738,000 pound, or upwards of 4,869 tons of 2,000 pounds each. If placed in ordinary coal carts, a ton in each, and allowing fifteen feet of space for each cart, it would make a continuous procession fourteen miles long. The above figures do not include the silver bullion and fractional silver coins held by the Treasury. Of the latter there are now on hand $30,000,000, and of the former $4,000,000, the aggregate weight of which is 1,217 tons, thus making the total weight of silver now in the Treasury 7,086 tons. To provide storage for this stock of silver an additional vault has been constructed in the basement of the Treasury Department, directly underneath the cash room. This vault is thirty-one feet four inches wide, fifty-five feet four inches long, and nine feet four inches high. It will hold fifty million silver dollars, which represents 1,790 tons. The walls, ceilings and floor are constructed of three chilled iron and two steel plates riveted together, thus making the metal case which forms the defenses of the vault over two inches in thickness. The foundation of the vault rests upon the earth, and the iron and steel flooring is laid upon twelve inches of hydraulic cement, to guard against entrance by means of a tunnel. The two doors by which entrance is obtained are massive, all known material being used in their construction to make them safe against felonous assault. Each door is furnished with two locks, one key being kept by Treasurer Wyman, and the other by Cashier Whepley. Large as the vault is, it will not hold the surplus dollars if their coinage at the present rate of 2,000,000 per month is continued for two years to come.

Much speaking is not always effective speaking. This truth is well brought out in the epigramatic description of Von Moltke as "the man who is silent in seven languages," which is ascribed to the Emperor William. Von Moltke, like Bismarck, is singularly chary of his words; yet, when he does speak, he speaks to the point; and it is a question whether the words of any other man in Germany have such a telling effect, when spoken, as the words of the old soldier who knows how to be silent in seven languages!

LEVI P. MORTON,

United States Minister to France.

Levi P. Morton, who is expected home within a few days, on leave of absence from his duties as Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States to the Republic of France, has well proved his capacity as a public servant. His present position is one of distinction, being a foreign mission of the first-class and commanding a salary of $17,500 a year. He has twice been named prominently as a man whose experience fits him eminently for a Cabinet office. Still in the prime of life, the expectation is good that he will serve his country very usefully for years to come.

He is descended from George Morton, one of the Puritan fathers, who landed at Plymouth, New England, in 1623, and is the son of the late Rev. Daniel Morton. His birthplace was Shoreham, Vermont, where he first saw the light on May 16, 1824. Having strong preference for a business career, when he was sixteen years of age he was placed in a country store. By the time he attained his majority he was made a partner by his employer. In 1849 he removed to Boston, where he was admitted as a partner in a wealthy mercantile firm, good fortune due to his ability alone, as he had neither adequate capital nor influential friends to gain him the promotion. Five years after he made New York his residence, and opened a place of business in that city. Prosperity attended him, and in 1863 he founded the banking houses of Morton, Bliss & Co., New York, and Morton, Rose & Co., London.

Mr. Morton was elected to Congress from the Eleventh District of New York in 1878, as a Republican. His majority was over seven thousand votes. He was re-elected two years after. President Garfield nominated him as Minister to France, which was unanimously confirmed by the Senate in March, 1881. The vacant seat thus created in the House of Representatives was filled by Roswell P. Flower, after a memorable contest, which gave this gentleman his first distinction in American politics. In May, 1881, Mr. Morton was appointed Honorary Commissioner General to the Paris International Exhibition of Electricity. Dartmouth College gave him the honorary degree of LL. D. in July of the same year.

Boswell's Genius.

In the London Atheneum a writer thus opposes the popular impression that Boswell blundered into writing the best of biographies. "He had his own idea of biography; he had demonstrated its value quite triumphantly in the 'Tour,' which, self-contained and organically complete as it is, is plainly not a record of travel, but a biographical essay. In the 'Tour,' that is to say, he had approved himself a great and original master of selection, composition, and design; of the art of working a number of essential details into a homogenerous and living whole; and of that most difficult and telling of accomplishments, the reproduction and representation of talk. In the 'life' he repeated the proof, on a larger scale and with a vaster scope, and with a finer mastery of construction and effect; and in what Mr. Napier describes as 'the task of correcting, amending and adding to his darling work,' he spent the few remaining years of his life. That he drifted into greatness, produced by his two masterpieces unconsciously, and develops a disease, is 'a rediculous conception,' as Mr. Napier rightly says. In proof of it we have Boswell's own words, and we have the books themselves. Such testimony is not to be overborne by any number of paradoxes, however plausible and persuasive. The Boswell was a gossip, a busy-body, and something of a sot, and that many did, and still do call him a fool, is certain; but that is no reason why he should not have been a great and admirable artist, and none why he should be credited with the fame of having devoted the best part of his life to the production of a couple of masterpieces as M. Jourdan talked prose, without knowing anything of what he was doing. Turner chose to go a-masquerading as 'Puppy Booth;" but nobody as yet has put forward the assertion that Turner was unconscious of the romance and splendor of his 'Ulysses and Polyphemus,' or that he painted his 'Rain, Speed and Steam' in absolute ignorance of the impression it would produce and the idea it would convey. Goldsmith reminded Miss Reynolds of a 'mechanic, particularly * * * a journeyman tailor;' but that he was unconsciously the most elegant and natural writer of his time is a position which has not yet been advanced. Surely it is high time that Boswell should take place in art which is his by right of conquest, and that Macaulay's paradox—which is only the opinion, brilliantly expressed, of an ignorant and unthinking world, should go the way of all its kind."

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 20,.....1884.

—East Lynne.

—East Lynne Christmas night.

—Followed by the side-splitting farce "The Double-bedded Room."

—Snow fell at Bakersfield last week.

—Mr. Rawson has bought the Furbee ranch, near Bishop Creek.

—Two poker games and five fights drove dull care away from Bishop Creek last Saturday night.

—Just notice the great reduction in the price of wire fence, as offered by Harris and Rhine. Read their advertisement.

—Charley Begole came up from Lone Pine on Thursday with a load of household goods for Mr. Hunter.

—It is reported that parties from Kern county area bout to purchase a large tract of land near Bishop Creek.

—William Pitts White was Lynched at Calico last week for the murder of J. O. Harris, a teamster in the emyloy of W. T. Coleman.

—Masquerade costumes can be had from below by ordering of the committee by Monday evening next. They don't costume much either.

—The stealing of a number of horses at Bakersfield lately, leads the Californian to suggest that the hanging of horse thieves has been neglected for some time and should be resumed at once.

A discourse on the "Descent of Man" and kindred topics; delightful singing, and quail on toast, are only a part of' the entertainment offered a visitor in' Round valley. That "dear little valley" is a dear little place to go to.

—Two or three young ladies in Round Valley are in imminent danger of being married right away, these cold nights are making the boys around Bishop Creek desperate, and they wont be put off much longer.

—Seth Sneden has made a discovery; he used to think he could play seven up; he has discovered he doesn't know much about that game. If Seth will come down to Independence and stay a few weeks he might learn yet.

—Last Saturday while the train was stopping at the way stations between Independence and Bishop Station, hunters left the cars and in a few minutes bagged quite a number of quail. From Big Pine up the birds were very plentiful. In Round Valley they appear to be very numerous.

—Bishop Creek Brewery is one of the best equipped establishments of the kind in the county. With large malt tank, kiln, cellars and all else needed in a first-class establishment. The proprietors not only supply the home demand but ship large quantities of malt to other breweries.

—The party at Bishop Station for the benifit of the school was very successful. Most of the credit is due to the good management of the commitee; all ladies. It was a generous act of Mr. and Mrs. Thede of the Station hotel, to give, free of cost, a nice supper to the whole party. That couple know how to keep a hotel, their way of doing so would make business anywhere.

—Bodie Burnside is held at Bishop Creek by circumstances over which he has no control. Miner traded off their wagon, and the party who got it drove off without the knowledge of Burnside; all the clothing of the latter was in the wagon and those who know him can appreciate the situation. Of course there is no ready made clothing at Bishop Creek that would come near fitting him; for that matter there is none anywhere that would fit him. His only resource is to sit wrapped up in blankets and have the boys come in and join him in prayer. It is to be hoped that Mr. Burnside may recover his garment and get bac kto Bodie before hot weather sets in.

LAMBS,—The ewes belonging to the flock of Mr. Birchim in Round Valley have lambs, now about two weeks old. The little creatures are doing well.

COPIOUS RAIN.—On Thursday afternoon rain set in and continued pouring down all through the night and next day. Everybody is pleased; the rain is good for the country.

FOR SALE.—One good cook stove, one parlor stove, a nice lounge, two sets of bed springs, one bedstead, one Singer sewing' machine and other articles. Apply at the office of THE INYO INDEPENDENT.

COLLECTION OF ORES. — Mr. Man, agent at Bishop Station, has a beautiful collection of ores. The collection contains specimens from many localities, but is made up mostly of ores of Inyo county. Such collections are a public benefit, as they show at once the mineral resources of the county.

PAINFUL ACCIDENT—Thomas McLeod of Bishop Creek, had a painful accident lately. He was conveying a load of lumber which was held in place by a lever fastened by a rope or chain. The fastening got loose and the lever sprung back, hitting Mr. McLeod on the head with such force as almost to break his skull. He is now able to be around.

HORSES FOR SALE,—Ten broo mares and eight young horses, all of good strain, for sale at market rates. I have good pasture from now until next Spring, for one hundred and fifty head of stock, and will agree to turn the animals out in good condition when the term of pasturage ends. Terms reasonable. Apply to CHARLES A. LEVY,

STATE SCHOOL TEXT-BOOKS.—The State Board of Education at its last meeting determined upon the publication by the state, of school text-books as follows: The readers are to be three in number. The third reader is to be the highest, and without illustrative cuts, unless to have cuts would not add materially to the cost. The second is not to have more than twenty pages of cuts and the third reader is not to have any more than thirty pages taken up with cuts. Two arithmetics are to be compiled, with a supplemental book of examples. It was the sense of the board that one book, consisting of a speller and word analysis, not exeeeding 150 pages, should be compiled. The language series is to consist of two books only, first, a work on language lessons, and second a grammar to be studied by only advanced scholars, the work on language lessons to be from 150 to 175 pages, and the grammar about 200 pages. A brief history of the United States, without the usual cuts of battle, and consisting of 400 pages, with a few necessary maps and illustrations, is to be compiled. The Board then adjourned, leaving the subject of the other text-books espesially provided by law to be considered to-morrow, SURPRISE PARTIES.—On Friday evening of last week a jolly crowd of young people were loaded into a sled drawn by four horses, manipulated by Mr. Jake Miller, and started on a cruise toward Camp Independence. An addition being made to their number at this place the crew still continued up the country. They soon returned, however, to Mr. Vagt's place where music and dancing was indulged in and the evening passed very agreeably, thanks to the kind attentions of the worthy host and hostess. The next evening the same number started out again, but were a "surprised party," the snow having melted so much during the day that they were unable to reach their destination on runners. Not to be baulked in this way or have their plans upset by such a circumstance, it was resolved that a couple of the young men should come to town for a wagon, which was done, and by this means the journey's end was reached without more mishaps—but with all the other misses. The merrymakers were diverted by games of various kinds and dancing until a late hour. A supper, kindly prepared by the entertainers, was then partaken of, after which they returned to Independence. As sleighing is something unusual in Inyo the ride of the first evening will long be remembered by the participants; the misadventures of the second evening will not make that forgotten any sooner. MR. E.

A GLOOMY OUTLOOK.—The business outlook in Bodie is very gloomy. The Free Press says; "The closing down of the Standard-Bulwer mill engaged upon working Standard ores and tailing: of the Bodie mill in crushing Bodie Con. rock, and the wholesale discharge of about eighteen miners at the Bodie mine, with eleven at the mill, together with about thirty at the Standard mine and fifteen at the first named mill—making a total of seventy-font men or, over—has cast the darkest cloud over the business horizon of Bodie ever yet experienced. To the business man, who figures the sudden suspension of $300 per day or $9000 per month circulated among a class, a large proportion of whom support families that expend each $100 per month for the necessaries of life, it does indeed look gloomy." The Press thinks that the future is not without good ground for hope, however: it says; "Now let us see what is left, Syndicate mill and mine now takes the lead as the "old reliable," and the curtailing of its force employed is not likely to occur for many months to come. The New Standard, with a drop of seven stamps and a brillant prospect, will contribute its mite. The Bodie Tunnel is well known as one of the best mines, and it is confidently expected that with Superintendent R. K. Colcord at its head things will bloom in that direction. The Mono has nearly a million of high grade ore in sight which will be worked all the same, no matter how much the jobbers try to manipulate the stock. Space fordids the review of many properties inferior to those mentioned, but if anyone interested has further doubts let him accompany us to the south end and we will make his eyes glitter if there is any virture in free gold and silver.

Personal Mention.

John Megee, sheriff-elect, moved into the builind just south of the printing office last Thursday.

Rev. W. Nims and wife went to Lone Pine this week; regular services will be held there next Sunday.

David Olds, of Round Valley had the small bone in one of legs fractured by a kick from a horse last week.

Mr Isaac Harris left Independence last Saturday morning for San Francisco, in consequence of a telegram informing him of the dangerous illness of his only sister.

James Stansfield has bought the Chastaine mine, in Deep Spring district, A force of men went over from Big Pine last Thursday to work on the mine, and it now looks as if the work would be pushed with vigor.

Mr. and Mrs. Bourland arrived home last Sunday, accompanied by Miss Berger, sister of Mrs. Bourland. The party crossed the montains without difficulty, not enough snow to hinder them being found anywhere on the road.

Will Staines and his mother are comfortably located near Salt Lake City. Will found his farm in good order, with a good comfortable house upon it. He has had offers made him for the place, but says it is worth a good deal more than was bid for it, and will not sell untill he gets his own price. He finds the weather very cold, and is not sure if he will like the country well enough to live there.

MINING.—A very good prospect is now open to Mr. H. A. Man. in his mine at Redding canyon, on the east side of the Inyo range, and not far the Poleta mine. A quanity of the ore was worked recently, and the bullion shipped to Selby and company, San Francisco. From less than one ton of ore the total yield was $78,60. Many pieces of ore brought from the mine are very rich in free gold, and there is a large quanity of ore in sight. The probability is that Mr. Man has found a valuable mine.

EVERYTHING.—A visitor at Sneden's store at Bishop Creek cannot fail to be surprised at the amount and variety of goods piled up from floor to ceiling. The new stock lately received is realy immense, and includes apparently every article of domestic use that can be thought of. A new addition, recently made to the building, is filled with fancy goods exclusively. Very many articles of great beauty are shown. Farmers had better not let their wives and daughters know anything about this part of Sneden's stock. A few staple articlts are named in Sneden's advertisement, read it.

MASQUERADE. — In another place will be seen an advertisement for a Grand Bal Masque to take place at Independence on New Year's eve. Nothing has been left undone by the management to make it a grand success. A reception committee has been appointed whose sole duty it shall be to attend to visitors, complaint having been made of want of attention to strangers herstofore. As the sole aim is to pay expenses and have a good time the price of tickets has been placed very low to be within the reach of all. To prevent any possibilty of disreputable characters taking part in the dance all maskers will be required to make themselves known to an Inspector. The Grand March will form at 8 p. m. sharp. Unmasking will take place at 12. The attendance will be very large.

A HARD EXPERIENCE.—Last week Mr. James L. Sherwin and two other parties started from Round Valley with teams laden with grain and flour for Bodie. When the parties were going through Long Valley the weather became so threatening that those in company with Mr. Sherwin, became alarm-at being caught in a snow storm, such as at times rages with fearful violence up there in the mountains. They at once unloaded their cargoes at a deserted building and returned home. Mr. Sherwin, more plucky than the others, continued on and delivered his load safely. He loaded his team with lumber at Mammoth and came on safely enough to where his companions had left him on the up trip. Here he camped all night; next morning while fastening a bale of hay on top of his lumber he lost his balance and fell to the ground, landing on his back. One of his arms struck on a small boulder and the bone was broken close to the shoulder. The unfortunate man was alone in the mountains, fifteen miles from the nearest habitation, and to reach that had to cross several large streams, now blocked and swolen with ice and snow. He got through, after much struggle, and severe suffering. A physician was got as quickly as possible and he is now doing well. Parties went and brought in the team and wagon.

Having a Hobby.

Every man ought to have a hobby—something to enjoy in total distinction from his work. Every woman should have one. Women need hobbies more than men. In how many systems of education, loaded with the idea of making the student fit for labor, does the all-important consideration enter of teaching him how to be happy when he is not at work; where and how to find what will surely be the great need of his life, rest.

Here and there in the world are rare exceptions to the general rule. There is sometimes a family in which the father and mother know how to enjoy life sensibly in its hours of play or rest, and around them grow up boys and girls fit to live, fit to do all the duties of life, fit to make their own lives happy and useful. From childhood they have known that life is surrounded by thousands of wonders, whether of man's or of God's creation. Nature and art alike furnish them with sources of knowledge and pleasure. You don't see those children dawdling around hotel drawing-rooms when the family are traveling. The boys may go fishing and the girls go hunting flowers, or both may go together and each share the other's enjoyment.

I met two of such a family the other day in the pine woods in Florida, a mile from the hotel. I did not know them, nor they me. I was digging up the bulb of a plant; and, as it came out of the ground, I heard an exclamation: "It is balbous, after all, Tom." Then I saw the bright and pleasant countenance of a seventeen-year-old girl who had come near. She had the same curiosity about the flower which I had. Then, for a while, she and her brother Tom rambled along with me. They were out for a walk. That to them meant keen enjoyment of pretty much all they saw. Trees, flowers, animals, the very skies and clouds, were more or less subjects of intelligent observation to them. She caught half a dozen lizards as we walked along, handling them gently, examined them carefully, and let them go unharmed. He talked of fishing. He had seen me going or coming in. He knew all about the fishing in his own part of the country, and a great deal about the habits of the fish. The two, brother and sister, discussed, one with the other, the flowers and animals. Clearly, they had been brought up from childhood to take a keen interest in the ordinary environments of country life. And I was not surprised, when she caught sight of an engraved gem in my ring, to find that at seventeen, and at fifteen he, knew enough about art to talk intelligently and without blunders. We had a pleasant chat as we strolled hither and thither in the old pine woods, and they two were very happy children. I doubt not that they confer a great deal of happiness and do a great deal of good in the circle in which they live. We met in the woods and they left me in the woods, and I did not see them again. In the hotel I looked around at some hundreds of faces and failed to see those. Nor was there any young girl's face there which seemed to have any ideas beyond the circle described on the floor by the edge of a skirt.

The moral of this somewhat rambling letter is this: Teach your young people how to be happy, how to enjoy life, how to make others happy. Give them interest in the things which surround life. Don't send them to Europe till they have some worthy tastes and desires to be intelligently gratified by their going. If they cannot find pleasure in studying nature and its products, don't take them to Florida.

A Dream of Wealth that Comes True.

A special dispatch to the St. Louis Globe-Democrat from Social Circle, Ga., says: Walnut Grove, in Walton County, is enjoying a remarkable sensation. Among the most respected residents of the place is Miss Laura Shelnut, who has passed the meridian of youth, but remains an active participant in society events. About a week ago she had a dream. Before her eyes was spread a panorama of the surrounding country. A young man elegantly dressed and ornamented with a red nectie, stepped up to her, and, pointing out a certain spot, told her to dig and wealth would be hers. Just then she awoke and the young man was gone, but the memory of the dream so troubled her that she slept no more that night. Monday night the dream was substantially repeated. So great an impression did it make that she rose and went to bed no more that night. The third night she again had the dream, which so impressed her that on the following morning she went out and sure enough at the designated spot, about three feet under the ground, she found a small tin box filled with coined gold. There are witness both to the finding and digging up of the box of gold. The whole community is excited over finding the treasure.

Lifted by Electricity.

In the Baltimore Academy of Music, near the proscenium boxes on each side, two little flights of stairs lead down from the parquette to the orchestra. They are the favorite resting place for the dudes of Baltimore during the performances. These dudes clog the way and ogle the chorus. The managers of the Academy found this a nuisance, and this week they connected the steel-covered stairs with a powerful electric battery behind the scenes. Last night twenty young men, attired in tight trousers, and with the hair on their twenty respective heads banged down almost to their eyebrows, sat joyously upon the steel rods snapping their forty eyes, of varied hue, upon the lasses of the Templeton Opera company. Suddenly a mad cry arose from the throats of the gilded youths, and, as one man, they leaped upon their feet, each flapping his coat-tail with a motion of anguish. The battery had been turned on.—Exchange.

MAKING A HUMAN FACE.

Thomas Colt's Thirteen Years of Experience Under the Surgeons.

In 1871 Thomas Colt, then twelve years old, was taken to Bellevue Hospital, suffering from a disease which had destroyed his nose and lips and had begun to affect his eyes. He was taken in charge by Dr. Gustavus Sabine, and since that time has been under treatment with a view to replacing the lost parts of the face.

After the course of the disease had been checked, the process of building up was begun by cutting away the flesh about the edges of the orifice, where the nose had been. Then the inside of the large finger of the right hand was flayed, and the fresh cut wound was fitted where the nose should be. The hand was held in place by bandages and plaster of paris until the finger had grown fast to the forehead and cheeks of the patient. In the meantime, the mouth was covered by the hand, and a silver tube was inserted into the lad's throat, through which he was fed and through which he also breathed.

When the grafting of the finger to the face was completed, and circulation established, the finger was amputated near the knuckle, leaving two-and-a-half joints attached to the face. The operations so far had required about a year, but the process was only begun. The next step was to trim down the finger into the shape of a nose by removing the bone and gradually building up the flesh on each side and drawing the skin from the cheeks and forehead over it. In course of time the result sought was obtained, except that there were as yet no nostrils.

The eyes of the unfortunate boy had both been drawn out of position somewhat, and these were straightened by clipping nerves in the manner usually adopted by oculists in treating cross-eyed people. The eyebrows were also patched up at the inner ends.

The next step was to give the boy a new pair of lips. This was done gradually by taking pieces of flesh from the cheeks and grafting them in place bit by bit.

Yesterday, after thirteen years of experience under a surgeon's knife, having meantime undergone and recovered from thirty different operations, the patient, now a young man, left the hospital. His face was smooth, and to the casual observer bore no traces of what he had passed through. The case is extraordinary for the extent of the work done and the perfect result obtained. Not less extraordinary was the fortitude of the patient, who never murmured under the necessarily painful operations, and who, when walking the floor because of his suffering, was wont to cheer up the other patients in the ward by telling droll stories, of which he had a large supply. He was known in the hospital as "Patient Tommy."—N. Y. Sun.

Solomon in the Shade.

When Solomon was asked to decide which of two women a child belonged to, he called for his sword and proposed to cut the child in two, and give a half to each, the real mother went into hysterics, and Solomon decided in her favor. But at the Mixed Court, on Friday morning, an actual division was made and Solomon's judgment was put in the shade. The chattel in dispute was a black dog, with his tail clipped bare except at the extremity, which still retained some long hair. The dog was quite unconcerned and went snuffing around the arena and under the Court table at the magistrate's feet, or wherever his tether would allow him to extend his explorations. The claimants for the dog were a butcher and a washerman. The butcher's assistant held a string in his hand, with the dog at the end of it. The washerman held a basket in his hand, containing hair which he had clipped from the dog's tail, and which he produced in proof of ownership. Mr. Howes, Inspector of Markets, stated that he had known the butcher for many years, and he had seen the dog at his place; and he believed that the dog belonged to the butcher. It was also stated by the police that an experiment had been tried at Hongkow police station. The washerman called on the dog, but it would not follow him; but when the butcher called, the dog heard his master's voice he knew the sound thereof. As a last resort to prove that the dog loved him and belonged to him, the washerman pulled off his jacket and showed a plaster stuck between his shoulder blades, saying that the dog had bit him there. The magistrate decided in favor of the washerman so far that he was allowed to keep the basketful of hair, and the butcher was allowed to take the rest of the dog.—Celestial Empire of Shanghai, July 18th.

The Pastor's Story.

A Boston pastor, who enlivens his Friday evening talks with anecdotes, is so fond of a joke that he would rather tell one at his own expense than not tell one at all. This is his latest:—

"I was writing by my study window, and a little Irish child was busying himself by throwing beans at the window. Losing all patience, I rushed out of the house, determined to frighten the boy. It happened that his mother was coming after him at the same moment, and we met by his side. I stormed at the child, and then, as the mother seemed excessively stupid, I gave her a piece of my mind. Finally, as a grand and overwhelming conclusion to my scolding, I said: 'A little discipline now with your children will save you much pain, if not disgrace, in the future. Think of that, madam; that is, if you ever do think.' 'Think, is it?' she replied. 'I think if you'd go back to your bedroom and wipe the ink aff av yer nose you'd be prettier, even if you didn't make so much av a sensation.' It was not a soft answer, but it had the effect of turning away wrath."—Exchange.

Warning to Pyramid Climbers.

There is just one thing that has not been said about climbing the pyramids, and I have a deep-seated conviction that it is reserved for me to proclaim that one thing. The pyramids are death on breeches. Although I was equipped with a very respectable pair of pants when I began, I found myself almost bereft of them when I reached terra firma again, and had to side along the homeward trip. This wrinkle is thrown out gratuitously. I believe no writer has hitherto been practical or philanthropic enough to announce this fact. Get your trousers lined with leather before you start.—Cairo Letter.

Only a Boy.

Only a boy, with his noise and fun,
The veriest mystery under the sun;
As brimful of mischief, and wit and glee
As ever a human frame can be,
And as hard to manage as—ah! ah, me!
'Tis hard to tell,
Yet we love him well.

Only a boy, with his fearful tread,
Who cannot be driven, but must be led;
Who troubles the neighbors' dogs and cats,
And tears more clothes and spoils more hats
Than would stock a store
For a year or more.

Only a boy, with his wild, strange ways,
With his idle hours on busy days;
With his queer remarks and odd replies,
Sometimes foolish and sometimes wise,
Often brilliant for one of his size,
As a meteor hurled
From the planet world.

Only a boy who will be a man
If Nature goes on with her first great plan—
If water, or fire, or some fatal snare
Conspire not to rob us of this, our heir,
Our blessing, our trouble, our rest, our care
Our torment, our joy,
"Only a boy!"

The Realities of Wedded Life.

There comes the inevitable day when the newly-wedded pair awaken from their love-dream and endeavor to settle down to the realities of life. The habits, the manners, and the tempers are things that neither knows anything about in the other, and that which was long concealed in an engagement of months is quickly revealed in the close relationship of married life. Some little habit that the bachelor or maiden has formed rasps to rawness the nerves of the other, and the determinations on either side to break the other of the fault only chafes and frets both without attaining the object. He thinks that home life should fill their every thought. She thinks a little society and gayety preferable. He is tired when he comes home at night, tired of seeing people, tired of talking to them; he has been in a whirl all day. She has moped by herself through the very same long, quiet hours in the "love of a cottage" that seemed so poetical to talk about, or has spent a dreary time, solitary and alone, through a cheerless winter day in her room at their boarding-house, and is only kept from downright rebellion by the thought that when "Charlie" comes home they will go to the theater, or go to see "ma." Then there is disappointment on both sides. She thinks he is "real mean" because he does not indorse her plans, and he thinks she is downright silly to leave such a cosy fireside and such a comfortable home place for any other spot on earth. He is perfectly satisfied, and wonders that she is not so. She has always found her "I wills" and "I wont's" the law and the gospel, and ten chances to one Charlie yields to her imperial highness, and is forever after a hen-pecked husband. But if that same Charlie is wise, and can convince his "little wife" without wounding her, he has forever won, not only her heart, but her judgment, and she looks up to and respects him for his firmness. It is very seldom the case that the first months of married life are the happiest, and it takes a big stock of love and good sense to launch a couple over the breakers into a smooth, open matrimonial sea.

The faults that are discovered, the weaknesses that are shown, the foibles that are betrayed, can only be met with forbearance, if a pair hope for a blissful future; then every after year confirms their oneness of heart, of sympathy, and of purpose, and any couple of this kind long married will tell you they are happier after all those years.

To Keep "Peesness" Going.

"Jacob Singleman, what are you doing here?"

"Vhell, I call aroundt to see the folks."

"Is this your first call?"

Where the Names Are Painted.

A father was telling his little son about the wonders of modern science. "Look at astronomy, now; men have learned the distance of the stars, and with their spectroscopes, what they are made of." "Yes," said the boy, "and, pa, isn't it strange how they found out all their names?"—Rehoboth Sunday Herald.

Hints to Writers.

The diphthongs ei and ie.—Some people are frequently at a loss how to spell words containing these diphthongs, when they have the sound of long e: for in some words the e comes before the i, as in receive, and in others the i comes before the e, as in believe. A careful writer would not like to be caught spelling receive, r-e-c-i-e-v-e, or spelling believe, b-e-l-e-i-v-e; and to tell in what words of this class e comes before i, and in what ones the i should be written before the e, without looking them up, is often quite a matter of perplexity. Nor will it satisfy all minds to do as we once heard a teacher direct, that is, make both letters like i and put a dot midway between them, so that it may be taken to belong to either. No one should be satisfied with less than making every letter distinct, and then putting the right letter in the right place every time.

The following general rule may be given in reference to these words, which will perhaps assist some minds to remember their proper spelling:—

1. After s, and c having the sound of s, e always comes before i: as, receive, deceive, perceive, conceive, receipt, deceit, conceit, ceil, seignior, seine, and seize, with their derivatives and compounds. To this there is one exception, in the word siege, in which, following s, the i comes before e.

2. In all other words of this class, i always comes before e: as, believe, belief, relieve, relief, mischief, handkerchief, fief, field, fiend, fierce, frieze, grief, mien, piece, pier, pierce, priest, reprieve, and yield, with their compounds and derivatives. To this there are two exceptions; leisure, and teil, a tree.

Doubling final consonants.—The words revel and rebel each end with a single l; but when another syllable is added, the l in rebel is doubled, but the l in revel remains single; thus, rebelling, reveling. Why is this? The rule is that all monosyllables ending in a single consonant preceded by a single vowel, double that consonant on taking an additional syllable; and words of more than one syllable ending in a single consonant preceded by a single vowel, if accented on the last syllable, double that consonant on taking an additional syllable; but if the accent is not on the last syllable, the consonant is not doubled. Thus: pean, peanned, peanning; hot, hotter; begin, beginning. The consonant is doubled in such cases to preserve the short sound of the vowel; as, for instance, peaned would naturally be pronounced with the long sound of a, instead of the short; and then it would be a very different word from peanned. Take the words first introduced: revel has the accent on the first syllable, so does not double its final consonant; but rebel has the accent on the last syllable, and therefore does double it. The word traveling has but one l because the word travel is accented on the first syllable, and the word worshiping but one p for a like reason. The rule is a simple one, and if the reader will fix it firmly in his mind, he will find that it will enable him to master thoroughly a numerous class of words, which otherwise he will be liable to misspell.

Abbreviations.—In writing for the press, use no unnecessary abbreviations. Never write Sab. for Sabbath, nor com. for committee; for, (1) it makes additional work at the office of publication to write them out; (2) it seems like abusing the noble institution of the Sabbath and the royal law of which it is a part; and (3) it looks shiftless in the manuscript. Never write tho for though, thro for through, etc. Write such words out in full, just as they should stand in print. Never abbreviate the name of a State, unless some place, county, town, city, or district in the State is named in connection with it. Thus, it would be proper to say, I spent a week in Chicago, Ill.; but not to say, I labored a long time in Ill., and then in Wis., and then in Minn., etc. In such cases the names of the States should be written in full. So we should not say, The Mich. Board of Health, The Vt. Legislature, etc., except in statistical or index work, where the shortest abbreviations are allowable.—True Educator.

How to Increase Your Height.

Our old friend, S. M. Reeve, writes to The Talker: "In response to the call to 'write quickly,' I send the following: Some of your readers may be interested in knowing how to increase their height as well as to develop muscle. The following directions are very simple: First, procure dumb bells, beginning with one pound weight, and increasing it as strength increases. Stand erect, brace the chest firmly out, and breathing deeply, curl dumb bells twenty-five times without stopping. Placing the bells on the floor at the feet and bending the knees a little and the arms not at all, rise to an upright position with them twenty-five times. Then stand erect, lift the bells twenty-five times as far up and out behind as possible, keeping elbows straight. Next starting with the bells at the shoulders, push them up high over the head, lower twenty-five times. Finally, start with the bells high over the head and lower slowly until the arms are in about the position they would be on a cross, the elbows being unbent. Raise the bells to height again and lower. Continue this ten times, taking care to steadily face the ceiling while the chest is swelled out to its uttermost. Invalids who cannot use the bells may be much benefited by taking the exercise with their hands free.

According to a computation made by Charles Reade, shortly before his death, America spends, on an average, $500,000 a day for plays and dramatic compositions, or the enormous sum of $30,000,000 per annum.

Mysterious London.

London is the irreducible mystery. Its "streets," "roads," "rows," "places," "courts," "squares"—all these terms being used in different places with a constancy of application, and an apparent absence of any reason for it in many cases, quite wonderful—run in all directions, neither having plan nor system. They are straight, crooked, curved; they have outlets; they have none; they are intercepted by gates, bars, and posts. Some are open for foot-passengers only; some for pleasure-carriages, not for cabs; some for all these, and not for trucks; and a personal knowledge of each is necessary to know which. The city has grown, it has not been built. It reminds me of the devil-fish,—a good-natured devil-fish—a devil-fish with the devil left out. It began by being a small fortress on the eminence now known as Ludgate or Tower Hill, called Llyn-dun, or "Hill-fortress by the Pool." It was soon surrounded in the region by many hamlets and villages, each with its own arrangement of streets, and with peculiar exclusive rights of some of its citizens in the ownership of land and other properties. Now it was its nature to grow indefinitely, and, as it grew, it stretched out its arms and drew itself around first one and then another of these towns, not to devour and absorb them, not to crush them or destroy their peculiar local individuality and anatomy, but, on the contrary, to introduce its own vitality, resources, and power into it. London, consequently, is the combination of hundreds of separate villages, with all their original streets having their first names, vested rights, and peculiarities intact. London first lost itself in them, and then they lost themselves in London. Hence, as you travel over it, you find hundreds of separate commercial centers, manufacturing centers, educational centers, literary and artistic centers, and eleemosynary and governmental centers. Nothing elsewhere like it in the world. Like the English political Constitution, it has grown, and not been made.

Here also is the secret of its strength, and of the vitality of the articulation of its parts, of the wonder that four and a half millions of people—more than the population of all Scotland—can live together in peace and harmony under one roof, while no one mind or government grasps the situation or looks upon more than one side of the civil mystery, the side nearest it. A bill is now before Parliament for the formation of one centralized government over the whole city, but it is doubtful whether as much may not be lost in the want of flexibility and adaptation of such a system as may be gained in overcoming the present want of unity, and questions of conflicting jurisdiction, while the amount of local responsibility and interest for the management of municipal affairs would be very much diminished.

Liverpool is the child of the modern era, of the new civilization—the civilization of cotton and commerce, manufacturing, and money-making. For the last 120 years it has regularly doubled its population and its wealth every twenty years. It is England looking out to America and the world; it is American in its spirit and genius, looking in upon England and astonishing it with its activity and enterprise.

Labor and Longavity.

Erriesson, the veteran inventor, was 81 years old recently. He is in excellent health, and works, it is said, sixteen hours a day, proving an exception so the general rule, like many others that are received without question, is a fallacy. Perhaps it might be fairly asserted that busy men live longer than idle men; that work is, after all, the sure elixia of life.

Was not Sophocles more than 90, when, to prove that he was not in his dotage—as his heirs claimed, in order to get his money—he wrote one of his greatest tragedies? Did not Humboldt do more work at fourscore than many bright men do at forty? Goethe, as every one knows, died with pen in hand at the age of 82. Von Ranke, the foremost of living historians, has just published another volume of his Universal History; he will be 89 years old next December. Carlyle and Emerson lost none of their vigor until they reached three-score years and ten.

And to-day, who imagines that Oliver Wendell Homes, already on the verge of 75, is old? Longfellow did some of his best work shortly before his death, at 75, and Whittier is now two years older than that. The vast energies, whose sum in many directions are known as Victor Hugo, show no signs of decrepitude, although it is now more than eighty-two years since Victor Hugo was born. Historians, it may be remarked, have as usually been long lived.

Voltaire died as 84. Thierry and Michlet, at 76; Mignet and Quizot, at 87. George Bancroft is now 84, and George Ticknor lived to be 80. In public life we have had several resent examples of great men whose power for statesmanship did not diminish through age. Gladstone is nearly 75, and Palmerstone was Prime Minister at the time of his death, two days before he had completed 81 years. Benjamin Franklin, in the last century, lived to be 84.

Engagement and Marriage Rings.

Of all ornaments worn, the finger ring seems to be intimately associated with the most important interests of life. It was a symbol of authority in ancient times and was the insignia of delegated power. When Pharaoh intrusted the government of Egypt to Joseph, "Pharaoh took off the ring from his hand and put it upon Joseph's hand."

The use of a wedding ring as well as betrothal ring seems to be of very old date. After the selection of the bride, always made by the parents of the lover, in ancient Hebrew times, the dutiful son and lover confirmed their choice by presents, by oaths, and by espousal. As the signet ring was an indispensable article of dress and a mark of authority, the presentation of a ring to the bride was in all probability a delicate compliment, as indicating authority over her husband's heart and household. Nowadays it is, in a manner, without any significance.

It is also said to mean, in the marriage ceremony, "Yours through eternity," as among some nations the ring signifies eternity, the circle having neither beginning nor end.

When the servant of Isaac first met Rebekah he bribed her with presents of bracelets and massive earrings, and after the consent of her parents was obtained there were costly presents of silver jewels, of gold and of raiment. There is no mention in the Bible of betrothal rings, but in Genesis 12:42, a ring is mentioned as a token of fidelity or friendship, and in Luke 15:22, of adoption.

In modern Greece two rings are used—gold for the bridegroom and silver for the bride. These are frequently interchanged by the two in token of domestic equality, the higher value of the ring of the husband, however, still marking his superiority.

In Pliny's time an iron ring was sent to the intended bride as a pledge. These were set with adamants, the hardness and durability of both iron and stone being significant of the perpetuity of the contract.

During the imperial period the man gave a gold ring to his betrothed, in token of his fidelity, which she wore on the finger next the small one. Wearing the ring on this finger of the left hand is due to a belief of the ancients that a vein of that finger ran directly to the heart and that the nuptial sign was thus joined to the seat of life.

The fact that the soft metal is less worn or injured on the finger of that hand may have much to do with it. It is said, however, that the ring was originally worn on the right hand of the bride by the Anglo-Normans, and was changed to the left or inferior hand in token of subjection to the husband.

The particular finger is said, also, to be favored from an old custom of placing the ring in the marriage ceremony first on the first finger in the name of the Father, on the second in the name of the Son and on the third in the name of the Holy Ghost.

Some wedding-rings were of brass and some of copper. Many wedding-rings were carved in devices, particularly that of a key, signifying the domestic authority of the wife. In the sixteenth century the Italians used betrothal rings made of silver, inlaid with niello. They especially esteemed the diamond wedding-ring from its supposed power of maintaining concord between the wedded pair.

The Irish peasantry have a general impression that marriage without a gold ring is illegal. This is, very probably, because fictitious rings of rushes were once used in England to delude girls into a mock marriage, as a ring is absolutely necessary in a Church of England marriage; but the Bishop of Salisbury put a stop to the sport by declaring the rush-ring contract legal.

Some years since a brass ring was used at a Worcester wedding before the Registrar, who was threatened with proceedings for not compelling a gold one to be used. A story is told of two paupers who came to the church and requested to be married with the church key, as the parochial authorities had not furnished them with a ring. The clerk, feeling some delicacy about using the key, brought an old curtain ring from his own house, with which the marriage was celebrated. Within the past hundred years the church key was used instead of a wedding ring in a marriage ceremony in a church near Colchester, in England, and it is said not to have been an unusual occurrence.

The Duke of Hamilton was married at May Fair with a bed-curtain ring. On one occasion a ring of leather cut from a finger of the bridegroom's glove was used as a substitute for the golden band.

In Iceland the betrothal and marriage rings could hardly be called finger rings, since they were sometimes so wide as to allow the entire hand to be passed through. In the solemnization of betrothal the bridegroom passed four fingers and his palm through one of these rings, which was made of bone, jet, gold, silver, or sometimes of stone, and in this manner he received the hand of his bride.

Near the loch of Stennis, in the Orkneys, are two large circles dedicated to the sun and moon. Only 100 years ago, a maiden who wished to be married performed alone the circuit of stones dedicated to the moon, and the intended husband traversed the circle of the moon. The pair met at the Stone of Odin, and, joining their hands through the matrimonial ring or hole in the stone, plighted their faith and became man and wife. A divorce was much more simple, as the pair had only to go to church and go out at different doors. Among the Anglo-Normans the wedding-ring was often worn on the thumb.

In Washington it is considered probable that Lieutenant Greely will next winter be given a place in the signal service, with the rank of major or colonel.

The red flannel shirt which, tied to an oar, was used as a distress signal by the Greely party in the Arctic regions, will be on exhibition at the Cincinnati exposition.

JUGGLERS OF INDIA.

Two of their Principal Tricks Very Gauzy Frauds.

The one class who interested me particularly in India were the jugglers. I have always had a fancy for prying into the secrets of prestidigitation, and I lost no opportunity of seeing these sleight-of-hand gentry at their tricks, and found occasion to witness many of their performances in different parts of India. My investigations lead me to state positively that the most remarkable stories told about them are fictions, based upon the flimsiest foundation of fact. The great majority of people like to be deceived in such matters, and will shut their eyes to palpable evidence of fraud, while travelers who eagerly sieze upon every chance to pad their narratives with sensational points naturally throw a veil of mystery around the tricks of the Indian jugglers. Let us take, for instance, the two performances that have been most frequently and most marvelously written up—that is to say, the mysterious basket and the mango-growing tricks. I have seen both of them over and over again, and have found the same easily detected frauds to exist in every case. The baskets are bell shaped and have a false bottom, between which and the exterior wall of the basket there is ample room for a very small child to stow itself away. The spectators are not allowed to touch, or even to come very near to the basket, and in a casual glance at the interior one is not apt to detect the false bottom. The basket is placed over the child, who squats upon the hard ground, and after sufficient time has elapsed for the youngster to crawl into his place of concealment, the juggler horrifies his audience by passing his sword through the basket, and then upon upsetting it, shows that the child has disappeared. Meanwhile a duplicate child that closely resembles the first one, enters upon the scene from the background, and the wonderful trick is completed. The famous mango-growing trick is even sillier than this. You have read, of course, how a man of mysterious arts plants a mango seed in a flower pot, and then makes a dwarfed fruit-bearing tree spring up from that seed. The facts of the case are simply these: The seed is planted and the pot is then placed under a sort of tent, whose voluminous folds must not be touched by any but the juggler. The latter then waters the earth in the pot and does a lot of manipulating while his hands are concealed in the tent. Meanwhile a fellow juggler is performing a series of other tricks to amuse and distract the attention of the spectators. When juggler number one has had time to change the pot for another that is hidden in the folds of the tent, he opens one side of the canvas a little and the second pot can be seen with a half-grown mango tree in it. After another interlude of the same sort the tent door is again opened and a third pot is disclosed which contains a little tree bearing a mango.

The Customs of the Country.

Some of the customs of Mexico amused me vastly. They always raise the price when you want anything in large quantities. The Mexican Central Road wanted a quantity of ties, and the contractor went to a Mexican and ordered 10,000 from him on trial. The ties were found to be suitable, and then they ordered 100,000. Then the man doubled the price. They tried to argue the matter with him, but he said if they wanted so much more work of him they must pay more. Another funny incident, which was related to me by one of the parties concerned in it, was about a judge. His signature was wanted on a certain paper. In the ordinary course of the law six months would have elapsed before he signed the paper. A great deal of money was involved in the matter, so the interested persons went to the Judge and made him a proposition.

"If you will sign this paper at once, said they, "we'll give you $5,000, and not a living soul shall ever know it."

"Not a living soul?" he asked.

"No, not one."

"Well," answered the Judge, "make it $6,000 and I shall not care a blank who knows it."

How a Hog Rooted Up a City.

I have just returned from the shores of Lake Superior, where I spent time visiting the copper regions, said to be the greatest in the world. Throughout the rocky, barren Keweenaw peninsula, good for nothing as farming lands, the immense copper deposits have caused large towns to spring up, and they now give employment to tens of thousands of men. About eighteen years ago a pig strayed from the drove to which it belonged and fell into a pit on a spot where the city of Calumet now stands. In rooting about it uncovered a mass of native copper, and showed to the world the location of the greatest copper mine it has ever known. As the result of that pig's rooting humanity is now $35,000,000 richer in the use of the copper there discovered, and the stockholders, who, aided by the pig, have helped the world to this wealth, have received about $25,000,000 for their trouble. A town of 6,000 inhabitants has gathered around the pig's hole, and nearly 2,000 men are employed in operating mines beneath it.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.:

C. Mulholland,
EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.

A MAN named E. C. Taylor, employed at the Copper Queen mine, Arizona, commited suicide recently. Deceased was aged about forty years, and has a mother and son somewhere in this State,

A RECENT issue of the Calico Print contained an article pointing out the advantages offered for building a branch road from that place to Resting Springs. In another artical the same paper says: "The inevitable result following such an enterprise must and will demonstrate the fact that the investment must and will prove a paying one as soon as thirty miles of it shall have been completed, and a greater ratio of business in accordance with its approach to the proposed terminus; if extended still further north, effecting connection with the Carson & Colorado road, it would contribute greatly to Daggett becoming a truly important railroad junction, for we accept as a foregone conclusion, the early completion of direct railway communication with San Diego.

THE burning of the Catholic Orphan Asylum at Brooklyn, last week, was a very dreadful affair. Over twenty bodies of the unfortunate children have been taken from the ruins; the fire broke out early in the evening, and it is said that all the inmates of the building might have been saved. A number of pictures and statues were saved, and the effort made for the preservation of these things might have been sufficient to save human life. It is not an improbable supposition that orphan asylums are organized as much to make a display of the power and consequence of sects as from a purely humane spirit; and that when such a calamity as this of Brooklyn occurs the buildings and furniture are regarded as of more importance than the unfortunate children. A look at the woe begone faces of children in orphan asylums is enough to suggest the thought that the happiness of the little creatures is not a matter of much anxiety to the managers.

THE Boys and Girls Aid Society, of San Francisco is doing most valuable service to humanity, by rescuing children from such surroundings as would inevitably make them criminals or paupers, or both; statistics are no measure of beneficence, but the fact of over 500 children who are under surveilance of the Society, most of them in good homes found for them by its Superintendent, is some indication of what it is doing,

Of these children, those who are not orphans might better be, and but for the over sight and care of the Society, would be helpless and friendless, and very likely to fall into evil ways and end criminals. The Society does not receive any aid from the State, but is entirely dependent upon charity. The smallest contribution will be thankfully received, and may be of material help to rescue some poor little waif from misery. Money, clothing, or any other useful thing that can be given should be addressed to E. T. Dooley 68 Clementine Street San Francisco.

In reference to the late decision of the Supreme Court on the question of riparian rights, a Committee of the people of San Barnardino say: The recent decision of the Supreme Court in the celebrated cases of Miller & Lux vs. Haggin & Carr, taken up from Kern county, affirms the doctrine of riparian rights to an extent which would permit a land owner near the mouth of Santa Ana river, below Anaheim and Santa Ana, to get an injunction from the courts compelling every user of water and every company taking water from the Santa Ana or its tributaries to turn every drop of water back into the river whether such water would ever reach the land of the applicants or not, or whether or not be desired to use the water after it did reach him. Thus, the North Fork ditch, the South Fork ditch, the Redlands Water Company, the Mill Creek ditch, the Meeks & Daley ditch, the Riverside canals, the Yerba ditch, the Semi-Tropic ditch, (irrigating Orange, Tustin City and Santa Ana) the Anahiem ditch and the Cajon ditch would all be compelled to turn their water back into the river (no matter how long they had used it) and Highlands, Lugonia, Redlands, Crafton, Old San Barnardino, Colton, Riverside Yerba settlement, Orange, Santa Ana, Tustin City, Placentia and Anaheim would all lapse back into desert wastes and fifty millions or more of property would be destroyed, if the doctrines of the Supreme Court were carried out and there were no legislation to remedy the evil.

If this evil can not be remedied we shall have no use for an Immigration Association, but an Emigation Association will be necessary to help people out of a country where it is impossible for them to obtain a livelihood.

THE new Spanish treaty is now said to be an attempt by Mr. Arthur and his friends to circumvent the laws of congress, and open the markets of the United States to the productions of all nations free of duty. The treaty is strongly opposed by the friends of our home industries and productions.

THE unsettled and dangerous condition of the law in relation to water rights, is now clearly exposed in the cases arising in San Barnardino county. The Judges of the Supreme Court declared what they believed to be the law but such interpretations of law would ensure common ruin if accepted and carried out. At present the only way to avert such evil is for the people to raise such a clamor as will induce the Judges to grant a rehearing, and reverse heir own decision. This is a very grave and dangerous condition of affairs. The law should be so plain that decisions could be given under it that no one would think of trying to have reversed. The late decision of the Supreme Court threatens ruin, not only to the people of San Barnardino, but wherever irrigation is necessary in the whole state of California; but if the Court can be moved by clamor to reverse a decision in one case it might in another where no good reason for reversal existed, and there would be no stability anywhere. Improved legislation in regard to water is a pressing need.

The Reform Dress.

"Yes," said Mrs. King, in answer to a reporter's inquiry, "I am wearing the rational dress. I always wear it, not only as a point of duty, but of pleasure. It is comfortable, healthful, manageable, and cool or warm, as one may wish. These are the trousers," and she drew up her skirt some inches. "Made just like your own, except the plaiting, and I always will maintain, infinitely more decent than petticoats. In a wind, petticoats are not coverings. In the mud, petticoats draggle or have to be carried in the hand. They cause colds and diseases innumerable. Why should women not wear trousers? No, I don't believe in imitating men's garments. This dress is distinctly a woman's dress. It merely is arranged on the recognition that women have two legs, and why they should not make the admission in their dress if thus they gain comfort is more than any one can tell. I was heartily in sympathy with the ideas on which Mrs. Bloomer's propositions were based, but those who took them up made the great mistake of appearing manish. We don't invade man's domain, but merely assert the right of women to break through absurd traditions, set the dressmakers at defiance and make themselves comfortable. Yes we have discarded the regulation, bony stiff stays. We leave our bodies at ease, though bodices, allowing freedom of movement are, of course, often worn by ladies who drink as we do. The rational-dress movement is very widely supported in England. It is an educational movement, and, as in all such, progress is not with a rush, but gradual. The ground we gain we keep. No mother who has worn the rational dress will allow her daughters to injure themselves by the common fashions. Miss Glen, confidential friend and assistant of Mrs. King, was questioned and answered: "I have been wearing this dress but eighteen months," said Miss Glen, "and have not yet the full courage of my convictions. Mrs. King's overskirt is not so long as this. She devotes her whole time and means to the movement. She is a widow with two daughters. I reside with her and fully appreciate how admirable the work is to which she is devoted. No, this is not the Lady Haberton dress. You know the reformers split into two sections on the trousers question. Reformers generally do split, I think, don't you? Lady Haberton's party want to wear the trousers very wide—a couple of yards around each leg. There is no particular advantage in that. What are the advantages in this? Why, I am a living example of them. Eighteen months ago, though I did not wear an array of heavy bugle trimmings and superfluous gewgaws, my clothes weighed from twelve to fourteen pounds. Now all that I have on weighs but four and one-half pounds. Since discarding the absurd stays I have gained two inches in chest measurement. I breathe freely and feel so much better." I ventured to remark that the young lady was a picture of health. "So would nearly all women be if they would but set the absurd conventional clothing aside and take to garments that satisfy their reason. We hope to make many converts in this country, where common sense ought to have the sway. The dressmakers are our worst enemies, but husbands and fathers can be counted on to neutralize their hostility in time. You can't think how much money this fashion saves, not to mention the absence of costly, foolish ornamentation and expensive fancy sewing. Lengthy doctors bills do not grow for families where the ladies wear our garments.—Toronto Globe.

ATTENTION is called by M. Thanneur to the value, for various mechanical purposes, of the timber known as "quebracho," so abundant in Brazil and La Plata. Its diameter, he says, varies within the same limits as that of the oak, but with a shorter trunk, and it is used for railway sleepers, telegraph poles, piles, etc., being very durable, especially when well seasoned. It is much heavier than water, its specific gravity varying between 1,203 and 1,333; of a reddish color, like mahogany, but becoming darker in time. On account of its hardness it is difficult to work, not being readily cut with an axe. It has been introduced into France, on account of its richness in tanning. A large proportion of Brazlian leather is tanned by the sawdust of quebracho, but the leather is rather brittle; one-third of powdered quebracho and two-thirds of ordinary tan give good sults.

A Pennsylvania farmer bored his well fifty feet deeper to get a better supply, and the wells of four of his neighbors went dry at once. Each one now sues him for damages.—Detroit Free Press. Well-bored farmer. Well-bored neighbors.

HUMBERT IV.

King of Italy and Visitor and Friend of His Plague-Stricken Subjects.

A more striking contrast in the relations between ruler and subject is not conceivable than that now seen in two of the great cities of Europe. The Czar of Russia is in Warsaw, the capital of Poland, protected by the services of spies and an imposing army of military. A thousand arrests have been made during his stay in that city, but notwithstanding every precaution and the risk of certain death to any unauthorized person approaching the autocrat, nobody would be surprised to hear that he had fallen a victim to violence. A section of his wretched and disaffected people no one can say how numerous, nor how near his person at any time—some even in the ranks of his guards—are thirsting for his blood, and his appearance in public at all is an act of courage which contrasts with the seclusion of the earlier part of his reign. Shifting the scene to Naples, in sunny Italy, where hundreds of people are dying of cholera every day, King Humbert IV. is at the head of the noble men and women who, at great risk to personal safety and their life, but with confidence in the good will and affection of the people, visit them in their stricken homes, and by large gifts and gentle ministrations, do their utmost to assuage the horrors of cholera in the meanest and filthiest districts of the towns and cities afflicted with it. The lovely and amiable Queen Marguerite is at her husband's side in this labor of love, a ministering angel to the needs of the poorest of her subjects. What gain follows the moral influence of this kingly and queenly example in these instances will never be known. The whole Royal Family of Italy, excepting the children, and the most cultured and the best of the sons and daughters of the nation vie with the amiable people at its head, in acts of practical beneficence which dignify human nature, and relieve with heavenly beauty the dark horrors of pestilence.

Italy is suffering more from the outbreak of the cholera this year than any other country. The plague soon did its worst in France, where, as a rule, hygienic conditions are superior to those of the neighboring country; but in Italy, not only is the loss of life appalling, but material prosperity is checked by the stopping of industrial works and the partial cessation of business. As the year is so far advanced, and the season of cool weather is approaching, there is hope that, at the latest, in a few week's time, we shall read that the plague is stayed. When this time shall come, the authorities of all the towns and cities visited by it, and all of which need equally sanitary improvements, will, it is trusted, improve the occasion to prevent its return by the timely outlay of money in their introduction. Cholera is preventible by these means, and surely the praiseworthy spirit evinced by the King and Queen and the leading people of Italy, during the period of the visitation of the cholera will be continued afterward, until the cities and towns of the kingdom shall be protected against its recurrence, by the effective means which are products of the intelligent and humanitarian ingenuity of the age.

Humbert IV., King of Italy, was born March 14, 1844, the eldest son of Victor Immanuel, afterwards King of Sardinia, and the first king of a united Italy, and the Archduchess Adelaide, of Austria. He took part in the movement of 1859, for the unification of Italy. This grew out of the alliance of Sardinia with France, which began during the Crimean war, and was cemented by the marriage of the Princess Clotilde, Humbert's sister, and daughter of Victor Immanuel, with Prince Napoleon, in 1859. The war between France and Sardinia on one side and Austria on the other, followed hard upon this union. It was favorable to the allies, but was unexpectedly terminated by the treaty of Villa-France, which preceded the Treaty of Peace of Zurich by a few months. Under the provision of this arrangement King Victor immanuel obtained Western Lombardy, part of the papal States, and the Duchies of Parma and Modena. Succeeding revolutions led to Victor Immanuel being made King of Italy, in February, 1861. At that time Rome and Venetia were not included in a united Italy. Prince Humbert took an active part in the stirring events of the times. He assisted in the work of reorganizing the Kingdom of the two Sicilies, and in July, 1862, visited Naples and Palermo, where he shared the popularity of Garibaldi. In the war of 1866, between Prussia and Austria, Italy was the ally of Prussia, and an Italian army under General Cialdini, invaded Venetia. Of this army Humbert commanded a brigade with the title of Lieutenant-General. He was present at the battle of Custozza, where he greatly distinguished himself. The crushing defeat of the Italian army there was more than offset by the success of the Prussian arms. and the restoration of peace added the remaining districts of Lombardy with Venetia, to the growing kingdom of Italy. In 1868 Humbert married his cousin, the Princess Marguerite of Savoy, daughter of the Duke Ferdinand of Genoa, brother of King Victor Immanuel. The only child born to this union is Victor Emanuel, Prince of Naples, who is now fifteen years old. After the outbreak of the war between France and Germany, in 1870, the French garrison was withdrawn from Rome, which was seized by the Italian troops. Humbert then made the Imperial City his residence. Victor Immanuel died January 9, 1878, when Humbert became the second King of United Italy. In November of the same year a man named Giovanni Passanante attempted to assassinate him while he was entering Naples in a carriage, but he escaped with a slight scratch.

During the reign of King Humbert Italy has steadily advanced in wealth and standing among the nations. Recent budgets have shown surpluses, and the army and navy of the kingdom are strong. Popular education has been improved, but illiteracy is still great; according to the census of 1881, the average number of the population above six years of age who could not read nor write, was 61.94 per cent. During 1882 Italy did a foreign trade amounting to about five hundred millions dollars. There are some six thousand miles of railroads open in Italy, and the completion of the existing system has been provided by legislation.

Personally King Humbert is exceedingly popular, and his Queen is much beloved.

A Strong Safe.

The millionaire's strong vault in this city is described as being one of the most redoubtable works of defense on the American continent. Its foundations were blasted out of the rock; the front wall is five feet in thickness, and the side and rear walls three feet, the materials used being pressed brick with brown stone trimmings. The beams, girders, and main pillars are iron, incased in fire-proof material. The doors, window frames and minor partitions are iron, marble, and glass. No wood is to be found in the structure. The great vault is 36x42 feet, of wrought iron, steel, and Franklinite iron, is imposing in strength and proportions, and is situated on the ground floor. Its four outer doors weigh 8,200 pounds each, and have every effective and known improvement in defensive devices. A massive wall of masonry surrounds the iron work. The vault, which is burglar, fire and water-proof, constitutes a distinct building in itself.—New York Observer.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 27,.....1884.

—Plenty of wild geese on the river. No hunters appear to trouble them.

—Roads are improved by the late rains; the sand is packed hard and made favorable for travel.

—Weather beautiful; after the recent rain the air is as balmy as in May in less favored localities.

—In old times too nails we danced off on puncheon floors; now it is finger nails that are burst off hugging in the waltz.

—Thirty miles travel through a deluge of rain without having his ardor dampened. Great are the powers of woman's attractions.

—Rain in unusual quantity has fallen during the past week. All over Owens Valley the ground is now thoroughly saturated with water.

—P. H. Buckley, a young man who was shot in Gold Hill last February, died in San Francisco last Saturday from the effects of the wound.

—A trace of the survival of the ancient mimes was seen in town on Christmas Eve. A few individuals were around dressed in fantastic costumes.

—An unusual amount of snow on the Inyo Mountains will afford a good water season for the miners. Present operations are suspended at several mines in consequence of the snow.

—Many of the costumes prepared for the masquerade on New Years night are of the most grotesque and ridiculous character. The success of the thing is now assured there will be a large attendence and lots of fun.

—A thief in Virginia City recently stole and drank up the contents of a "pretty little blue decanter." It was a fire hand grenade. When that fellow dies he ought to take with him, where he is sure to go, a dozen of the grenades. He will need them.

—Doc. Stevenson thinks it unjust to refuse him the chicken because no additional holes were found in it after he shot at it; he is quite sure his shot entered the chicken. Perhaps the boys thought a dose from the Doctor ought to be sure death in any case, and as the chicken lived they could not believe his shot had hit it.

—To the surprise of everybody the attendance at East Lynne was a perfect jam. It was fortunate that heavy rain prevailed all through the forenoon of Christmas day; had the whole day been clear as was the night far more people would have come to see the performance than could possibly have been cantained in the hall.

INSTALLATION.—The officers of the Masonic Lodge will be installed this evening.

NEW YEAR'S GIFTS.—A large stock of pretty toys and fancy articles suitable for New Year's gifts at L. Wood's.

ODD FELLOWS INSTALLATION.—The officers of the Odd Fellows Lodge at Independence will be installed next Thursday evening.

PHOTOGRAPHIC.—Those in want of good photographs, would do well by calling at Hanson's photo-gallery soon as the gallery will remain in independence only a few days. All photographs at this gallery are made by the latest instantaneous or lightening process.

RUN AWAY.—When going home from town last Tuesday evening and near the Barrows ranch, the team of Mr. Walter ran away. He was thrown from the buggy but escaped much hurt. The team ran back to town and were found near Mr. Robinson's place. The accident was caused by one of the breast straps breaking.

COLD WEATHER.—Up in Alpine county the weather must be very cold The Argus says: Mellie, little son of A. M. Grover, picked up a hammer while playing in the door yard last Saturday morning and placed his tongue against it, when the hammer froze to his tongue from which he could not unfasten it. The little fellow came crying into the house in a pitiable state; and on removing the hammer from his tongue a piece of the surface membrane was found to have adhered to the metal.

A GRAND SUCCESS.—The entertainment at Mair's Hall on Christmas night was a most gratifying success. The play of "East Lynne" was rendered in a style that would not be expected of a company of amateurs. Good though the former presentation of the same play was by the same performers, each one of them did far better on this last occasion. Indeed, every member of the company deserves high praise, but from the greater difficulty of the character it can be safely premised that no one will object to special mention being made of the way in which the character of "Lady Isabel" was performed by Miss Conklin. The faculty of rising above self-consciousness, and becoming for the time another being is the one thing needful to success in acting, and is one of the rarest of gifts. This faculty Miss Conklin possesses in a very marked degree. She was 'Lady Isabel' and nothing else; seeming entirely unconscious that she was before an audience. The fun of the "Double Bedded Room" kept the whole audience in roars of laughter from beginning to end; from little babies to old people, all were highly amused by the absurd positions of this highly ridiculous farce. So entirely satisfactory was the whole performance that the same audience would have been glad to attend a repetition of it on the next night.

Things Worth Knowing.

Beeswax and salt will make your rusty flat-iron as clean and smooth as glass. Tie a lump of wax in a rag and keep it for that purpose. When the irons are hot rub them first with the wax rag, and then scour them with a paper or cloth sprinkled with salt.

When soaking salt fish before cooking add a little vinegar to the water; it improves the fish.

Steel knives which are not in general use may be kept from rusting if they are dipped in a strong solution of soda, one part water to four of soda: then wipe dry, roll in flannel and keep in a dry place.

Fish may be scaled much easier by dipping into boiling water about a minute.

For "greasing" the griddle, cut a white turnip in halves and rub the griddle with it. It causes no smoke, smell, taste or adhesion, and is better than butter or grease.

The value of crushed ice as a dressing for burns and scalds, first pointen out by Sir James Earle, is confirmed by Dr. Richardson. The ice, after being reduced by crushing or scraping to a fine state of division as dry as possible, is mixed with fresh lard into a paste, which is placed in a thin cambric bag and laid upon the burn. This is said to banish all pain until the mixture has so far melted that a fresh dressing is necessary.

Flowers may be kept very fresh over night if they are excluded entirely from the air. To do this wet them thoroughly, put in a damp box and cover with wet raw cotton or wet newspaper, then place in a cool spot.

Milk which is slightly turned or changed may be sweetened and rendered fit for use again by stirring in a little soda.

Stale buns may be made to taste as nicely as when fresh if they are dipped a moment or so in cold water, then put into a hot oven for five or ten minutes. They will turn out as light and crisp as when first baked.

To scour knives easily, mix a small quantity of baking soda with your brick-dust, and see if your knives do not polish better.

Kerosene will soften boots or shoes which have been hardened by water, and render them as pliable as new. Kerosene will make tin tea-kettles as bright as new. Saturate a woolen rag and rub with it. It will also remove stains from clean varnished furniture.

When one has had a fever and the hair is falling off, take a teacup of sage, steep in a quart of soft water, strain it off into a tight bottle. Sponge the head with the tea frequently, wetting the roots of the hair.

The Scientific American says if a bottle of the oil of pennyroyal is left uncorked in a room at night, not a mosquito or any other blood-sucker will be found there in the morning. Mix potash with powdered meal and throw it into the rat holes of a cellar and the rats will depart. If the rat or mouse gets into your pantry, stuff in its hole a rag saturated with a solution of cayenne peper, and no rat or mouse will touch the rag for the purpose of opening a communication with a depot of supplies.

Salt will curdle new milk; hence, in preparing milk porrige, gravies, etc., the salt should not be added until the dish is prepared.

Don't waste your time scouring your breadpans; bread never bakes as well in a bright tin. Indeed, the best bread pans, if one can afford to have them made, are oblong ones made of Russia sheet iron.

Paint spots may be removed from any kind of clothing by saturating with equal parts of turpentine and spirits of amonia.

When coffee beans are placed upon hot coals or upon a hot plate the flavor arising is one of the most effective and at the same time agreeablo disinfectants. If no heat is obtainable even the spreading of ground coffee on the object to be distinguished is most satisfactory.

Cream cures sunburn on some complexions, lemon juice is best on others, and cold water suits still others, best.

To clean stained woodwork, which is also varnished, an old housewife recommends the saving of tea leaves from the teapot for a few days. Drain them, and when you have a sufficient quantity put them in clean, soft water; let them simmer for half an hour. When almost cold, strain them out, and dipping a flannel cloth in the water wipe off the paint, drying it with another flannel cloth. One cup of tea leaves to one quart of water is the due allowance.

Hartshorne applied to the stings of poisonous insects will allay the pain and stop the swelling, or apply oil of sassafras, which is better. Bee-stings should be treated in this way.

Pickles or vinegar will not keep in a jar that has ever had any kind of grease in it.

Paper Doors.

"Feel the weight of that door," said a builder to a reporter, who was looking at an unfinished apartment house up town. The reporter prepared to lift what seemed a polished mahoghany door, but it proved too light for any wood. "It is made of paper," said the builder, "and, while it costs about the same as wood, is much better, because there is no shrinking, swelling, cracking, or warping. It is composed of two thick paper boards, stamped and molded into panels and glued together with glue and potash, and then rolled through heavy rollers. It is first covered with a waterproof coating, and is painted and varnished, and hung in the ordinary way. Few persons can detect that they are not made of wood, particularly when used as sliding doors."

Ex-Governor Young, of Ohio, who moved to Cincinnati in 1810, says he recollects Mme. Trollope, author of a book on domestic manner of the Americans. She ran a bazar in Cincinnati, and she was the first lady he ever saw on skates.

A WELLS-FARGO MESSENGER SHOT.—A shooting affair at Hawthorne Sunday morning, resulting in the serious wounding of Mike Tovey by William Withrow, a saloon-keeper and former express messenger between Hawthorne and Bodie, Candelaria and other routes along the Carson and Colorado road. There has been a grudge between the two men for several years, dating back to the time of the stage robbery for which Sharp was convicted and sent to State Prison, at which time Tovey shot one of the robbers, whose body was buried beside the road and dug up again by Detective Hume, who then obtained the evidence which convicted Sharp. Hank Rogers and Jessie Pearson, Belleville stage officers, perhaps, had some thing to do with the ill feeling between Tovey and Withrow. Pearson is now serving a term in prison, but the keenness of Pat. Reddy got Bogers clear.—Enterprise.

GOT HIS MAN.—A party who bears the same name as a former resident of Inyo got his man lately. The Kern county Gazette says: "A difficulty occurred at Mojave, on Sunday last, which resulted in the death of Michael Donahue. It seems that Donahue, who had been drunk all day, went into the saloon of Wm. Harroll and ordered a bottle of whisky, which was handed to him. Upon receiving the whiskey he refused to pay for for it, when Harroll set it back on the shelf. Both parties then sat down by the stove, when Donahue commenced abusing Harroll, and finally struck him, following up the blow by knocking him into the wood box and picking up a stick of stove wood with which to hit him. In the mean time Harroll had drawn a pistol and fired, the ball passing through Donahue's heart, killing him instantly. A Coroner's jury found that he did the killing in self defense.

KILLED.—A young man named Harry Curtis was killed lately in Alpine county. The Argus says: Young Curtis was engaged with other men, in digging dirt from a bank some ten feet high. Their manner of working it, was by digging under the bank at the bottom, and then driving heavy bars in at the top, thereby caving off many tons at a time. Just before the death of the young man they had dug under the bank, driven down the bars, and made an unsuccessful attempt to start the large body of dirt. When it was found they could not move it, the deceased went down to dig further under the bank, when it commenced to cave. The Superintendent warned the unfortunate young man to get out of the way, but by some mishap, he failed to do so and was struck down by the immense body of dirt. His left hip was broken and his body otherwise badly injured. He died of internal hemmorrhage a few minutes after the accident."

A STEERING BALLOON.

The Inventors About Discouraged When Success Came.

Next to the Chinese war the most exciting topic of conversation in the city of Paris the last few days has been the new air ship, or steering balloon, and all manner of speculations are rife as to the uses it can be put to. Scientific men have often demonstrated the impossibility of steering a balloon in the air, as they had previously shown the impossibility of almost every other modern invention. But the balloon is soon destined to be no longer merely an object of amusement and a dangerous experiment. Already the cost of armies fitted out in the air is under consideration, and everybody is anxious to see the new balloon under way.

When the announcement was made a few days since that the problem of steering balloons had been solved it was met with the old-fashioned incredibility and attracted little notice. It appears, however, to be an established fact. Two French engineer officers, Captain Renard and Captain Krebs, have for six years past been making experiments in an enclosed area in the Meudon Forest. The establishment was on the point of being closed for want of funds, but M. Gambetta, when president of the budget committee, obtained a grant of 100,000 francs. M. Herve Mangon reported yesterday to the Academy of Science that on August 9th these two officers mounted their balloon, steered it against the wind at a height of about thirty yards to a given point at a considerable distance, not stated, then turning round and describing a circle of about three hundred yards returned straight to the point of departure and descended with precision at a spot which would have been very dangerous had not the balloon been absolutely under command.

The Academicians exhibited much interest on receiving this communication. M. Faye inquired why the public were not admitted to witness the experiment and asked that next time at least a deputation of the Academy might be present. M. Herve Mangon replied that the paper he had read was furnished by the Minister for War, whose secret the discovery was, and he was not at present authorized to say anything more. Such an important secret is not likely long to be kept, especially as experiments on a large scale must necessarily be in view of the public. Already sketches of the balloon appear in the papers. It is in the shape of a cigar, pointed at both extremities. A net hangs from it, containing seats for two aeronauts, a directing apparatus and a rudder. It is stated that the force is obtained by a series of electric accumulators of ten horse power, which will be operative during four hours.

M. Renard, when interviewed, said that the problem of directing the machine is completely mastered, that it is only a question of time and money and, considering the popular interest in the question, the necessary sum would, doubtless, be voted. A machine would only take six months to make, and thus an aerial army of the utmost usefulness could be created, though the expense would certainly be very great. During the seige balloons had been sent out with messages. This system would enable them to return with replies and a regular postal service could be established between Paris and Bordeaux or anywhere else as easily as by railroad. The balloon, besides, could be made a formidable engine of war. Its carrying power increases rapidly in proportion to its size, and thus it might be made to convey bodies of a hundred soldiers or more. It will be seen that the inventor only thinks yet of its use in the field, but his invention evidently can be applied to numberless other purposes.

She Did Not Believe It.

"Land sakes, what lies they do print in the papers every day," remarked an old lady from down East, as she looked up over her paper "Beats all what whoppers they do tell. Maybe they spect sensible people do read and believe all their falsehoods."

"What is it now, mother?" inquired the old lady's son.

"Why, see here, Wendell, this paper says in Cuba, where there was trouble with the hands in a sugar bush, the sap house was guarded by muskeeters. The idea of muskeeters guardin a sap house. An' that ain't the worst on't. Here it goes on to say they were fine, strapping fellows, each full six feet high. There wa'n't no muskeeter ever lived six feet high, an' I know it. Down to our house in Vermont we have got muskeeters as big as anybody's, an' I never saw one over six inches long in my life. Six feet! I don't see why editors want to lie so; do you, Wendell?"

"But look, mother, it doesn't say guarded by 'muskeeters,' but by 'musketeers.' Don't you see the difference, now?"

"Yes, there's a difference, I admit, but these printers always have some way to crawl out of their lies. I wonder they don't blame it on the poor compositor."

TOOMBS AGAIN.

General Toomba is just as lively and picturesque as ever. "What do you do with the 'nigger' down in Georgia?" a Virginian asked him the other day. "Oh," said the General, "we run a good nigger for office sometimes. We get around him and pat him on the back and tell him to go it, encourage him as far as words go, if he is a decent sort of a nigger, but he is never elected."

"Gets a complimentary vote?"

"Yes, he gets a fair complimentary vote, and is pretty well satisfied. That's all we have to do for him in politics."

Florence Nightingale says that from her long experience in India she is convinced that cholera is not directly communicable from person to person.

Immoral Literature.

A people's standard of intelligence and morality is invariably regulated by the standard of their literature. If of a low, trifling, immoral type, such will be the character of the people among whom it circulates. All history, experience, and observation demonstrates this fact. It is to be found in the rise and fall of men and parties, nations and dynasties. Deprive a people of their literature and they degenerate into barbarism. Limit them to immoral literature, and debauchery and crime are sure to overtake them sooner or later.

It costs no more to feed people on sound philosophy, draped in proper language, than it does to surfeit them with cheap romance adorned in rags and polluted in filth. But another objector replies that the public taste requires such literature, and the papers would not sell without it. If this be true, it simply proves that the public taste is perverted and public reform is seriously demanded. The pernicious influence of this standard of literature may not be so readily detected in the adult population as among the youth. In the one case character is formed and habits are fixed, while in the other, character is in process of formation, and habits may be changed or improved. If the family table or library is loaded with indecent literature and sensational trash, the youth of the country are not to be blamed if they grow up to be desperadoes and land in the penitentiary or on the gallows. Censure belongs not to the wrong-doers, but to the parents or guardians who placed such temptations in their way. There is a prevailing tendency to ignore the wholesome restraints which characterized the culture of children at an earlier period in our history, and the increase of crime in our land is largely attributable to this neglect in the education of children. No feature of domestic discipline should be more scrupulously guarded than that which limits the selection of family literature to such papers and books as produce a sound, healthy, moral, social, and political influence on the youth.

The Mouse-Eating Spider.

About three years ago I succeeded in getting a live specimen at last, or rather three of them, all together, in a nice box fronted with wire netting. I bought them from a native, who sells cigars and walking-sticks on the market wharf in Babia, a town on the coast of Brazil.

For some time after they commenced their voyage they ate nothing, though I put flies and cockroaches into their cage. Then I offered them bits of fresh-killed raw beef, which they seemed to suck; and then, as if this had whetted its appetite, to my great disgust one killed the other two and sucked them till only the dry shells were left of them, bloating itself visible in the process.

When it began to get cold I filled up the box with hay, under which he retired and went to sleep, and in that condition was forwarded by rail from Southampton to the Zoological Gardens in London, where I next saw it in a splendid glass cage, labeled with a Latin name several inches in length, and composed expressly for it.

They called it the "mouse-eating" spider, because it seemed to prefer the bodies of young mice to anything else. At first it used to drain them of blood as vigorously as it had served its late companions, but after a bit it got to know there were more in the larder, and that it could have as many as it wanted, so it would cut out the top of the head with its sharp nippers, suck the brain and leave the rest.

How the Bedouins Conquer Thirst.

In an article on "The Rescue of Chinese Gordon," to be found in "Open Letters" of the September Century, General R. E. Colston, late of the Egyptian General staff, says: "In the 'Waterless Land' water is the paramount question. If it be asked how a large body of Bedouins like the ten thousand who nearly destroyed the British squares at Tamai manage to subsist, the reason is plain. In the first place, they do not need the enormous trains required for a European army. They are the most abstemious of men. Each man carries a skin of water and a small bag of grain, procured by purchase or barter from caravans. Their camels and goats move with them, supplying them with milk and meat, and subsisting upon the scanty herbage and the foliage of the thorny mimosa, growing in secluded wadies. These people could live upon the increase of their flocks alone, which they exchange readily for other commodities; but being exclusive carriers and guides for all the travel and commerce that cross their deserts, they realize yearly large amounts of money. As to water, they know every nook and hollow in the mountains, away from the trails, where a few barrels of water collect in some shaded ravine, and they can scatter, every man for himself, to fill their water-skins. On my first expedition, near the close of the three years' drought, I reached some wells on which I was depending, and found them entirely dry. It was several days to the next wells. But my Bedouin guides knew some natural reservoirs in the hills about six miles off. So they took the water camels at nightfall, and came back before daylight with the water-skins filled. An invading army would find it hard to obtain guides, and even if they did, they must keep together, and could not leave the line of march to look for water. Besides, the Bedouins, accustomed from infancy to regard water as most precious and rare, use it with wonderful economy. Neither men nor animals drink more than once in forty-eight hours. As to washing they never indulge in such wasteful nonsense. When Bedouins came to my camp, water was always offered them. Their answer would frequently be: "No, thanks: I drank yesterday." They know too well the importance of keeping up the habit of abstemiousness. No wonder they can subsist where invaders would quickly perish."

An ingenious Southerner has conceived the idea of opening a hotel for suicides. He acts upon the American idea of the largest liberty for the largest hallucinations.

Come to think of it, we shall not propose the Empress of Austria for membership in the Lowell Press Rifle Association. Although she made eleven successive bull's-eyes at the rifle practice, it seems that she missed the twelfth shot.
